
COMMUNICATIONWhy study business communication?

You may say that communication is important and that you'll be spending a lot of time doing it. But you're pretty good at communicating. After all you talk to people, write notes, read books, get along with other people, and make myself understood already. Why should you study communication?"

The apparent simplicity of communication is deceptive. Just because we all communicate every day does not make us good communicators. Just because some aspects of effective communication are based on common sense does not mean common sense alone is enough. Skilled communicators draw on an extensive and complex body of knowledge, including semantics (the study of word choice), linguistics (the study of language), rhetoric (the study of writing and speaking effectively), psychology, sociology, graphic design, and even computer science. You will explore and apply the scholarship and research from all of these fields in your study of communication.

"Why then," you may well ask finally, "study business communication specifically? Communication is communication: I've taken plenty of English courses and communicated in every one of my other courses."

Good communication does, in fact, cross disciplines: correct grammar and audible speaking, for example, are as necessary in a geography class as they are in a business communication class. There are, however, at least five ways in which what you will learn in this class differs from what you have learned, or will learn, in your other classes. First, the subject matter is different: here you will get a chance to practice communicating with concepts and techniques from areas such as accounting, finance, and marketing. Secondly the forms are also different: you will, for example, practice writing memos, letters and business reports – not just term papers, exams and essays. Third, in this class you will have a chance to practice your oral presentation skills, which – according to various studies – you will probably be using extensively in the business world. Fourth, you may learn a slightly different style: in general, business communication is more objective, systematic, and concise than creative or personal communication. Finally, perhaps the most important difference is that . You will learn to persuade people to accomplish your desired results.

What is communication?

I have been discussing how important communication will be for your success in business. What you might ask, does the term communication mean? It is certainly hard to define because it has come to mean practically anything.

Definition of Communication

The word communication means the act or process of giving or exchanging of information, signals, or messages as by talk, gestures, or writing. Technically speaking, in the act of communication, we make opinions, feelings, information, etc known or understood by others through speech, writing or bodily movement.

Why do we communicate?

The purpose of any given communication may be:

- a) to initiate some action;
- b) to impart information, ideals attitudes, beliefs or feelings; and /or
- c) to establish, acknowledge or maintain links or relations with other people.

Initiating Action

Initiating action may be achieved by two basic categories of communication.

1.3 Expressing needs and requirements. This can range from a baby's cry – or even the bleep of an alarm clock – to an adult's more precious expression of needs and wants. In a business organization, it would include briefings, instructions and procedures manuals. This will only be effective where the other person is willing to satisfy the needs.

1.4 Persuading and motivating others to carry out the desired course of action” in other words, giving them a reason (other than one’s own want or need) to perform that action. Persuasion of this kind is likely to be a major element in marketing and sales: a sales up cannot simply ask a customer to buy the product because she, the sale rep, needs a success. She must show that there are benefits to the consumer, which will make the purchase worthwhile.

Imparting Information

1.5 Imparting information, ideas, attitudes, beliefs and feelings may have any number of specific purposes.

- a) Creating awareness
- b) Creating understanding
- c) Persuading others
- d) Influencing others

1.6 Information gathering is a constant activity of human beings. We receive a great deal of data and information in our daily lives, only some of which we seek or consciously absorb. Think about it: news bulletins, books, bank statements, business information, gossip, thing people tell you, things you ask them. This list is endless.

1.7 Remember that other people may be seeking information in the messages you ‘send’ (and in the tone of your voice and other indications of what is ‘between the lines’). This information may or may not be something you wish to communicate: you will need to be aware of it before your listener/reader is.

Establishing relations

1.8 Establishing, acknowledging and maintaining relations with other people is a vital function of communication.

Importance

Communicating effectively in speaking and writing is useful in all areas of business, such as management, technical, clerical, and social positions.

The ability to communicate well has always given advantages to those who possess it. Communication has a rich history. The ancient world, both the East and the West, depended on oral communication. In ancient Greece and Rome, it was necessary to communicate when dealing with matters in assemblies and the courts. During the Medieval and Renaissance Periods, the oral tradition progressed. As writing became more important as a permanent record of communication, authors and books on written communication principles appeared.

So we can say that some of today’s principles of writing are a mixture of ancient oral and written traditions.

Advantages of Communication in your Career

Your success in your career is based on your ability to do well in written and oral communication. This ability to communicate effectively is a valuable asset for you.

If your career requires mainly mental rather than manual labour, your progress will depend on how effectively you communicate your ideas to others who need or should receive them.

Strong communication skills are found in every job description listed by companies’ advertising positions. Communication is a primary responsibility in many careers, such as customer relations, labour relations, marketing personnel, public relations, sales, and teaching.

It is also required in government and non profit organizations. There skills play a major role at every level.

Even if your work is mainly with figures, as in the accounting profession, the ability to communicate to those who read your financial reports is necessary.

A quality for Promotion

An executive must have the ability to communicate if he wants promotion. Those who cannot communicate effectively in either oral or written communication remain in the same positions.

Many surveys have born out the idea that effective communication is essential for success and promotion in every field.

Communication & Global Market

The way you communicate both within and outside your own country affect everything you do. Moreover your ability to speak and write effectively will also make a difference to your organization. These qualities will help you to be successful in dealing with international business people.

Always remember that “To the customer, you are the company”. Your dealing with customers, clients and the public reflects the company you represent. Important communications can make difference to your company because each message communicates the essential quality and culture of your company and can either build goodwill or destroy it.

Messages written to international customers and other business contacts are sensitive to the readers. Your goodwill as well as your organization’s is at stake. So be very careful while communicating with international people.

The ability to communicate effectively with others is repeatedly named as a top quality of a successful businessman. You as a businessman may be a very intelligent person; but if you can’t get your message across to the other, you will be thought of as less intelligent than you are because ideas are common, but the ability to clearly communicate ideas to others is rare.

If you are a better communicator, customers and business associates form better impression of you and your organization. This impression is based solely upon your ability to communicate both oral and written. Effective business message builds or retains goodwill which is a priceless commodity. Because the exchange of written communication is vital to a businessman for promoting goodwill, the art of producing effective correspondence will help ensure your success in business.

So, your ability to communicate is, in fact, your trademark. The memos, letters and reports you write, demonstrate your ability, or lack of ability to communicate. Presenting yourself through your communication will project a favourable image as well as promote successful business operators both internally and externally.

Besides, as a businessman you are required to run the working of your organization smoothly because you are to clearly transfer your objectives, policies, method of working etc. to the people working with you at different levels, so this ability to communicate is very crucial for you as a businessman for basic managerial functions.

As a businessman you will regularly plan design and control affairs to maximize your production and minimize your cost. Your ability to communicate effectively is going to help you from the brainstorming step to implementing the objectives that you chalk out for the promotion of your business.

Another factor that is important for a businessman to achieve the desired objectives is decision making. Here again ability to communicate both orally and in writing helps you make the most of yourself and your organization.

Above all else, your ability to communicate helps you in understanding human relationships. Being an effective communicator you can interact effectively and positively with others. This situation results in an open climate of communication within organization as well as outside it. So communication is of paramount importance for a businessman to be successful in his business.

Developing the right attitude

“To the customer, you are the company.” Your attitude when dealing with customers, clients, and the public reflect on the company you represent. Our attitude will reflect your country and your culture.

Each message communicates the essential quality and culture of your company and can either build goodwill or destroy it.

Doing an honest job enthusiastically and competently helps both the doer and the receiver. Answering even routine inquiries should and can be an interesting challenge.

Preparing Adequately

Most people can learn to communicate effectively for business if they are willing to devote whatever effort is necessary to prepare themselves adequately. In addition to the proper goodwill-building attitude, the following qualities are desirable:

- Careful, sound judgment when choosing ideas and facts for each message.
- Patience and understanding, even with unjustly insulting persons.
- Integrity, backed up by a valid code of ethics.
- Reasonable facility with the English language.
- Applied knowledge of the communication process and principles and of successful methods for sending and receiving message.
- Knowledge of the cultural conventions of your audience.

Cultural Diversity at work

Today's workplace is increasingly diverse in age, gender, and national origin. Diversity has brought problems to organizations, but it has also brought strengths. Changing demographics have contributed to change in management styles, making effective communication central to success in carrying out the organization's business.

Components of communication

Communication is a process of transmitting and receiving verbal and nonverbal message. Communication is considered effective when it achieves the desired reaction or response from the receiver. Simply stated, communication is a two-way process of exchanging ideas or information.

Factors interact in the communication processes, affected by various contextual conditions and decisions.

Every country, every culture, and every company or organization has its own conventions for procession and communicating information. This aspect of context is the playing field on which you must plan.

Your own view of the world affects, attitudes, opinions, emotions, past experiences, likes and dislikes, education, job status, and confidence in your communication skills all influence the way ability to analyze your receiver's culture, viewpoint, needs, skills, status, mental ability, experience, and expectation. You must consider all these aspects of context in order to communicate a message effectively.

Advance in Technology

The internet, e-mail, voice mail, faxes, pagers, and other wireless devices have revolutionized the way people communicate. Such technological advances only being new and better tools to the workplace but also increase the speed, frequency, and reach of communication. People from opposite ends of the world can work together seamlessly, 24 hours a day. Moreover, advances in technology make it possible for more and more people to work away from the office—in cars, airports, hotels and at home.

FLOW OF COMMUNICATION

- An organization is a group of people associated for business, political, professional, religious, social, or other purposes. Its activities require human beings to interact and react, that is, to communicate. They exchange information, ideas, plans, order needed supplies and make decisions, rules, proposals, contracts, and agreements. All these activities require one skill, that is communication. So we can say that communication is the “Lifeline” of every organization
- An exchange of information within an organization is called internal communication. It takes place at different levels -- downwards, upwards and horizontal
- To exchange information within and outside the organization we use a variety of formal and informal forms of communication that carry the flow of information.

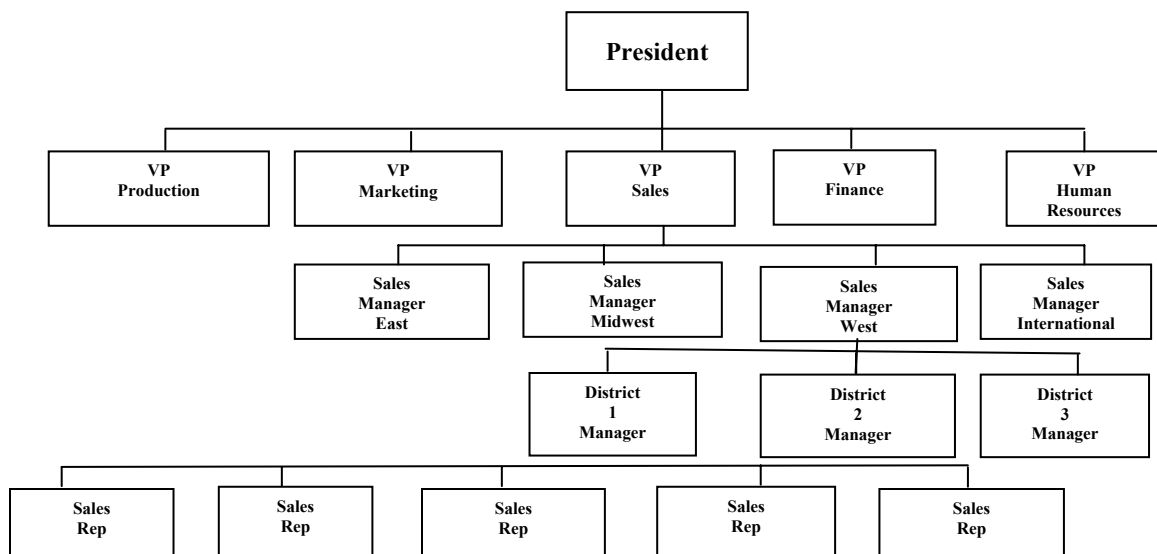

Flow of Communication

Internal Communication

The formal Communication Network

- The formal flow of information follows the official chain of command.

Direction of flow within the organization

Downward Flow

- Organizational decisions are made at top level and then flow down to the people who carry them. When employees receive appropriate downward communication from the management, they become motivated and more efficient. They need clear job directions, safety rules, facts about organizational strategy, products, and viewpoints on important controversial issues. They are concerned about their benefits such as health care, promotions, pensions, training, etc.

Upward Flow

- To solve problems and make intelligent decision manager need what is going on in the organization. Upward internal communication is also very important. Many executives want comments from employees in addition to the usual periodic reports. Successful managers listen closely to opinions, complaints, problems, and suggestions, especially when these are clearly put forward. They want to know about problem, emerging trends.

Horizontal Flow

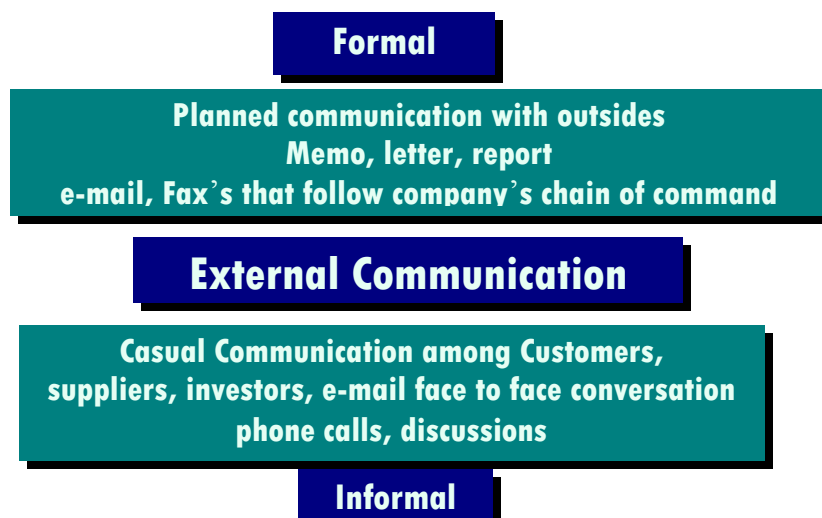

- Horizontal flow takes place between peers in organizations in order to solve problems, perform job duties, prepare for meetings, and cooperate on important projects. So you can imagine that people spend time on listening to and making requests, writing notes and memos, and discussing and writing about projects. And they do it through communication.

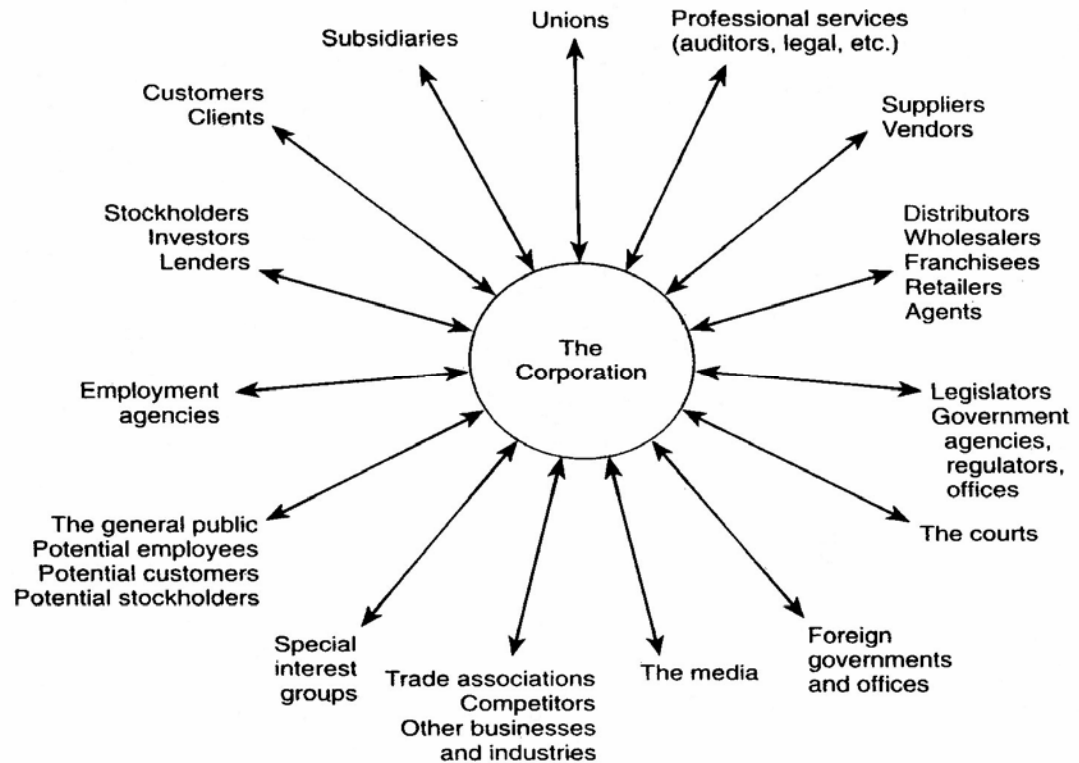

Informal Internal Communication

- Every organization has an informal communication network – a grapevine – that supplements official channel. It is important source of information. It is casual conversation of an organization.

External Communication

- Communication that takes place outside the organization is called external communication. The right letter, proposal, report, telephone call, or personal conversation can win back an angry customer, create a desire for a firm's product or services, encourage collections, motivate performance, and in general, create goodwill.

Informal External Communication

- Although external communication is formal, informal contacts with outsiders are important for learning customer's needs. Plenty of high level manager recognize the value of keeping in touch with "the real world by creating opportunities to talk with and get feedback from customers and frontline companies.

Ways of External Communication

- Letters, pamphlets, annual reports, interviews with the news media, etc.

THEORIES OF COMMUNICATION

Electronic Theory

- One very influential theory is called the mathematical or electronic theory of communication.
- This idea emphasized the technical problems of transmitting a message from a sender to a receiver.
- It is based on, and uses the language of, electronics.
- The message begins with an information source, the mind of the sender (writer or speaker), who encodes a message into words and sentences.

Electronic Theory

- The message is transmitted as a signal (marks on paper or sound waves) through a channel, where it may be distorted by noise (such as smudged typing or acoustical problems). As a last step, the receiver (listener or reader) decodes the message.

- The electronic theory is helpful because it introduces the ideas of senders and receivers and of possible interference. It emphasizes one important aspect of communication: accuracy.
- Its usefulness is limited , people are not machines
- a accurate electronic communication system can be design but not a human one
- ignores money other important dimensions of the situation in which we communicate

Social Environment Theory

- Social environment theory of the social and behavioral scientists
- We must consider the situation, the social context in which we will work.
- When we work and communicate together, we all participate in a social situation
- Within that situation, each agrees to assume certain roles – such as “compromiser,” “initiator,” “or “encourager” – based on our part in the activity.
- We each have a certain status prescribed officially, such as our job title.

Social Environment Theory

- We need to understand the rules, or the “culture,” of the environment in order to communicate: both the official rules – such as company policies and practices – and those unwritten rules regarding to whom, how, and when, and for how long it is appropriate for us to communicate within a certain organization.

Social environment is helpful because it adds the important dimension of the specific social situation

Rhetorical Theory

- Third set of theorists add more dimensions to our understanding of the communication process: communication is not linear, but circular; not just sending a message to be received, but producing a response; not static, but dynamic.
- Rhetorical theorists provide an important addition to a communication model for business communicators

- Many people caught up in the accuracy forget third crucial variable, producing the desired response from their audience.
- This model is circular, not linear.

Chat

- In fact, perhaps the most important difference between business communication and other forms of communication is this circular quality: your business communication effectiveness depends on the result you achieve.

THE PROCESS OF COMMUNICATION & MISCOMMUNICATION

- Communication is a process of sending and receiving verbal and nonverbal messages.
- Communication is considered effective when it achieves the desired reaction or response from the receiver.
- Communication is a two way process of exchanging ideas or information.
- The process of communication has six components: sender/encoder, message, medium, receiver/decoder, and feedbacks.

Context

- Every message, whether oral or written, begins with context. Context is a broad field that includes country, culture, organization, and external and internal stimuli.
- Another aspect of context is the external stimuli
- Internal stimuli have effect on how you translate ideas into a message.
- Your attitudes, opinions, emotions, past experiences, likes and dislikes, education, job status and confidence

Sender / Encoder

- While sending a message, you are the “encoder”, the writer or speaker, depending on whether your message is written or oral.
- express your message so that the receiver(s)
- react as you desire
- You decide which symbols best convey your message and which message channel will be most effective among the oral and written media (letter, memo, telephone, etc)

Sender/Encoder

(experiences, attitudes, skills) perception

Idea encoding Symbol decisions Sending mechanisms

Message

- The message is the main idea that you wish to communicate; it is of both verbal (written or spoken) symbols and nonverbal (unspoken) symbols. First decide exactly what your message is. Also consider the receiver of your message.

Medium/Channel

- It means the way by which a message is communicated
- You can choose electronic mail, the printed word
- The choice of medium is affected by the relationship between the sender and the receiver.

Oral Communication

- The oral communication brings back immediate feedback
- It has a conversational nature with shorter words and sentences
- It stresses on interpersonal relations
- This medium needs less technical details
- Its sentence structures are simple

Written Communication

- This medium is more formal with focus on contents
- It can convey any amount of technical information
- It is best for permanent record
- This medium uses longer words and longer sentences. It brings delayed feedback

Inside Your Organization

For internal communication, written media may be:

- memos, reports, bulletins, job descriptions,
- posters, notes, employee manuals,
- electronic bulletin boards, even internal faxes.

Oral communication may take the form of

- staff meeting reports, face to face discussions,
- presentations, audio tapes, telephone chats,
- teleconferences, or videotapes

Outside Your Organization

External written communication media may be:

- letters, reports, telegrams, cablegrams,
- mailgrams, faxes, telexes, postcards, contracts,
- ads, brochures, catalogs, news releases etc.

Orally it may be

- face to face discussions, telephone,
- or presentations in solo or panel situations.

Receiver / Decoder

- The receiver / decoder of your message is your reader or listener.
- influenced by nonverbal factors such as touch, taste, and smell

Receiver/Encoder

(experiences, attitudes, skills)

Receptor mechanisms Perception Decoding

Idea interpretation

Feedback

- Feedback can be oral or written, it can also be an action, such as receiving in the mail an item you ordered. Sometimes silence is used as feedback, though it is not very useful. Senders need feedback in order to determine the success or failure of the communication.

BARRIERS IN EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION /COMMUNICATION FALLOFF

People in the world are not exactly alike. Cultures or countries are not the same. These differences, however, can cause problems in conveying your meanings. Each person's mind is different from others. As a result, message sender's meanings and the receiver's response are affected by many factors, such as individual:

Semantic barriers

Conventions of meaning

Physical Barrier

Psychological barriers

Emotional barriers

Perceptual barriers

Barriers involving values attitudes etc

Semantic Barrier

A basic principle of communication is that the symbols the sender uses to communicate messages must have the same meaning in both the sender's and receiver's minds. You can never be sure that the message in your mind will be clearly sent to your receiver. The world is full with errors, as a result of differences in semantic (meaning) understanding.

Symbol Referent (reality)

Less Common Experience

Common Experience

Problem in Conventions of Meaning

Denotation

A denotation is usually the dictionary definition of a word. Denotative meanings name objects, people or events without indicating positive or negative qualities. Such words as car, desk, book, house, and water convey denotative meanings. The receiver has a similar understanding of the thing in which the word is used.

Denotation

A connotation is an implication of a word or a suggestion separate from the usual definition. Some words have connotative meanings, that is, qualitative judgments and personal reactions. The word man is denotative, father, prophet, brother are connotative. Some words have positive connotations in some contexts and negative meanings in others. For example, slim girl and slim chances.

Physical Barriers

Communication does not consist of words alone. Another set of barriers is caused by your own physical appearance, your audience, or the context of the document or the presentation. Your ideas, however good and however skillfully imparted, are at the mercy of various potential physical barriers.

For Writing

For Speaking

For Writing

There is a whole barrage of possible physical blocks, jammed or jagged margins, fingerprints or smudges, unclear photocopies, unreadable word processor printout, water or coffee, tea spots etc

For Speaking

Mumbling, not enunciating, speaking too quickly, noises become of hissing ventilation, blowing air conditioning, ringing telephones, slamming doors etc.

Psychological Barriers

Because of the changing world, everyone has his own concept of reality. Also, human beings, sensory perceptions – touch, sight, hearing, smell, and taste are limited, and each person's mental filter is unique. In our daily interaction with others, we make various abstractions, inferences and evaluations of the world around us.

Emotional Barriers

One possible psychological block is emotional, you may be emotionally block is you are announcing a new policy you may become popular or unpopular

First mayor presentation

Writing someone you dislike

Other may feel hostile

Perception of Reality

The perceptual problem is that people think differently

Abstracting

Selecting some details and omitting others is a process called abstracting. On many occasions abstracting is necessary. However, you should be cautious about "slanted" statements.

Differences in abstracting take place not only when persons describe events but also when they describe people and objects.

Slanting is unfair in factual reporting. When presenting some particular facts, you include your own biased ideas into it, you make slanting statement.

Try not to let personal preferences affect your factual reporting of information.

Perception of Reality

Inferring

Conclusions made by reasoning from evidence are called inferences. We make assumptions and draw conclusions even though we are not able to immediately verify the evidence. Some inferences are both necessary and desirable; others are risky, even dangerous.

Necessary Inferences

When we reach a foreign country, we are sure that we will be treated politely.

When we post a letter, we infer that it will reach its destination.

Conclusions we make about things we have not observed directly can often be against our wishes.

Barriers Involving Values, Attitudes etc.

Both personality and attitude are complex cognitive process. The difference is that personality usually is thought of as the whole person whereas attitude may makeup the personality. The term attitude describes people and explains their behavior. More precisely an attitude can be defined as a persistent tendency to feel and behave in a particular way towards some object.

For example: Name does not like night shift, so his attitude is negative towards his work assignment.

Barriers Involving Values, Attitudes etc.

A receiver's attitude toward a message can determine whether it is accepted or rejected. The effectiveness is influenced also by the values, attitudes, and opinions of the communicators. People react favorably when they receive agreeable message. Receivers' views of the information will affect their response. This response could be what the sender desires or just the opposite.

Occasionally people react according to their attitudes toward a situation rather than to the facts.

Barriers Involving Values, Attitudes etc.

Closed Mind

Some people hold rigid views on certain subjects. They maintain their rigid views regardless of the circumstances. Such a closed minded person is very difficult to communicate to.

Sender's Credibility

Other factors effecting attitudes, opinions and responses

Environmental stresses

Personal problems

NON- VERBAL COMMUNICATION

Interpreting the nonverbal part of the message.

Nonverbal communication consists of that part of a message that is not encoded in words. The nonverbal part of the message tends to be less conscious and often reveals the sender's feelings and preferences more spontaneously and honestly than the verbal part. If the verbal message does not match the nonverbal communication, people tend to believe the nonverbal message.

Four types of nonverbal messages

1. Personal (to the individual)
2. common to a group of people or culture
3. universal (to humankind)
4. unrelated to the message (random)

Four types of nonverbal messages

Personal Nonverbal communication involves kinds of nonverbal behaviour that are unique to one person. The meaning is also unique to the person sending the message. For example, someone may work while talking, another person may work in silence. One person may laugh due to nervousness or fear, while another may cry.

Cultural nonverbal communication, by contrast, is characteristics of, or common to, a group of people. It is learned unconsciously by observing others in the society group. In Aboriginal culture, for example, eye contact is less acceptable than it is European culture.

Universal nonverbal communication is behaviour that is common to humankind. It shows happiness, sadness or deep-seated feelings – for example, a smile or tears.

Unrelated nonverbal communication, such as a sneeze, is unrelated to the verbal message. It can distract from the verbal message, but has little effect on the meaning of the verbal part of the message.

Objectives of Nonverbal Communication

- Define the Term 'nonverbal Communication
- List and define the four types of nonverbal communication
- Identify its importance to the total message
- Distinguish four ways of grouping nonverbal communication
- Identify seven aspects of nonverbal behaviour
- Highlight the role of nonverbal behaviour in the communication process
- Confirm with the sender of a message the meaning of their nonverbal behaviour communication
- Interpret and use your own nonverbal communication appropriately
- Use nonverbal communication

Analysing Nonverbal Communication

- People communicate nonverbally with body movement and with personal relationship behaviours. This nonverbal communication changes or complements the verbal communication. Nonverbal communication always occurs in a context, or framework. The context often determines the meaning of the nonverbal behaviour. On different occasions the same nonverbal gesture may have completely different meanings. Without context and spoken words, nonverbal behaviour is almost impossible to interpret with any accuracy.

Analysing Nonverbal Communication

Seven different aspects

- Theoretical writings and research classify nonverbal communication into seven main areas:
 1. Body movement (kinesics behaviour)
 2. Physical characteristics
 3. Touching behaviour
 4. Vocal qualities (paralanguage)
 5. Space (proximity)
 6. Artifacts
 7. Environment

Body Movement

- Body movement, or kinesics behaviour, includes movement of the hands, head, feet and legs, posture, eye movements and facial expressions – all these affect the message.
- Body posture – the way a person stands, leans forward, pointing and shaking a finger at someone, is seen as trying to dominate the other person. The way this is received by others, and the type of feedback given, determines how the communication will flow.

Physical Characteristics

- Physical characteristics such as body shape, general attractiveness, body and breathe odours, weight, hair and skin colour are important parts of nonverbal communication.
- Because people react and respond to these factors, they all determine their responses in interpersonal encounters. First impressions and images of others can be associated unconsciously with past experiences of people with similar physical characteristics.

Paralanguage (Vocal Qualities)

- Paralanguage is that part of language associated with but not involving the word system. It consists of the voice qualities and vocalizations that affect how something is said rather than what is said. Voice qualities include:
 - Pitch range
 - Pitch control
 - Rhythm control
 - Tempo
 - Articulation control
 - Resonance.

Paralanguage (Vocal Qualities)

- Vocalizations also give clue to the total message. Three of these are shown in table. The tones of voice, rate of speaking and voice inflection are an important part of the total message. A tired person, for example, will speak more slowly than usual, a disappointed person may speak with a flat tone, while the tone of voice of someone excited about a coming holiday reflects this excitement.

NON- VERBAL COMMUNICATION

Type	Examples
Vocal characterizers	laughing, crying, sighing, yawning, clearing the throat, groaning, yelling, whispering
Vocal Qualifiers	intensity (loud/soft); pitch height (high/low).
Vocal Segregates	sounds such as 'uh-huh', 'um', 'uh'; silent pauses.

Proximity (Use of Space)

- Proximity means nearness, in terms of physical space. How people use their personal space and that of others communicates a message. This response to spatial relationships in formal, informal and intimate setting indicates how that person perceives and feels in that space.
- People also use their height and weight to convey a message. If you tower over other people in a way that intrudes on their personal space you may cause their discomfort and withdrawal.
- Personal space varies according to:
 - Gender
 - Status
 - Roles
 - Culture
- Research has shown that Australians speaking to acquaintances or work colleagues leave about an arm's length of space between themselves and the other person. People speaking to friends and family leave about half an arm or an elbow's length between themselves and others. People in intimate relationships allow direct and close contact when speaking to each other. The use of space reflects the way people feel about others.

Artifacts

- Artifacts are objects used to convey nonverbal messages about self-concept, image, mood, feeling or style. For example, perfume, clothes, lipstick, glasses and hairpieces project the style or mood of the wearer. Many artifacts are common to the group but we also use artifacts, particularly clothing, as an individual form of communication.
- Appearance and cloth are important and highly visible parts of nonverbal communication. Consider the difference between the clothes you wear to the beach and the clothes you wear to a job interview. The choice of clothes reflects your mood and your attitude to the occasion. Other people note and place their own interpretation on your dress.
- Even if you decide you will not bother about personal appearance or clothes, others will read this message as part of your nonverbal communication.

Environmental Factors

- The environment can influence the outcome of communication. For this reason, organization gives careful consideration to office space, factory layout, the sales area and conference venues. The environment should put people at ease and match their expectations; an unsuitable environment can produce 'noise' that causes communication barriers and interferes with the communication process.

- Certain instincts, such as desire for privacy, familiarity and security, need to be satisfied. Careful design of the workplace can meet these needs and in so doing improve communication, productivity and morale. Natural and artificial light, colour, temperature, tables, chairs, desks, lounges, plants, sound, artwork, magazines, and floor and wall coverings all have an impact on people's perception of an organization.
- In the workplace, attention to punctuality or a disregard for it can make a strong nonverbal impact. A disregard for punctuality may, like a sloppy appearance, merely reflect a casual attitude. However, a deliberate decision to keep a contact waiting may be a way to communicate a negative message.
- While punctuality is a matter of courtesy, attitudes towards its importance vary between cultures. To be kept waiting for a business appointment on a tropical island will not have the same significance as a delay in some European countries where punctuality is highly regarded.
- The above discussion of the seven aspects of nonverbal communication provides a theoretical analysis. However, to consider each aspect in isolation is artificial. In practice, what is sent as a total message is a cluster of nonverbal cues in association with the spoken words

TRAITS OF GOOD COMMUNICATORS

Following are the traits of good communicators:

- Perception
- Precision
- Credibility
- Control
- Congeniality

Perception: They are able to predict how you will receive their message. They anticipate your reaction and shape the message accordingly. They read your response correctly and constantly adjust to correct any misunderstanding.

Precision: They create a 'meeting of the minds'. When they finish expressing themselves, they share the same mental picture.

Credibility: They are believable. They have faith in the substance of their message. You trust their information and their intentions.

Control: They shape your response. Depending on their purpose, they can make you laugh or cry, calm down, change your mind or take action.

Congeniality: They maintain friendly, pleasure relations with you.

Regardless of whether you agree with them. Good communicators command your respect and good will. You are willing to work with them again, despite their differences.

Careful Creation of the Message

- Give your audience a framework for understanding the ideas you communicate
- To make your message memorable:
 - Use words that evoke a physical, sensory impression.

Feedback

Make feedback more useful by:

- Planning how and when to accept it.
- Being receptive to your audience's responses.
- Encouraging frankness.
- Using it to improve communication.

In accordance with your request of recent date, in which you expressed concern about the damaged merchandise you received on May 18, I have reviewed your case and have reached the decision that full restitution should be made to you.

Sincerely,

Dear Customer,

Now is the time when all smart shoppers are taking advantage of the special money-saving buys at Bright, while our Back-to-School Sale is in progress.

School will be starting soon and crowds of shoppers are trying to buy their children's clothes.

Why not come in now while we offer the lowest prices of the year and a pleasant shopping atmosphere.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Tariq

I regret to inform you that we are completely booked up for the week of August 22. we have no rooms available because the Word Processors Association will be holding their convention at our hotel during the week of August 22. As you will surely understand, we have to reserve as many rooms as possible for members of the association.

If you can't change the date of your trip, maybe you could find the double room with bath that you want at another hotel here in Murree.

Cordially,

Dear Mr. Asif:

With reference to your order for our 35 mm camera, we are in receipt of your cheque and are returning same.

I beg to inform you that, as a manufacturer, our company sells cameras to dealers only. In compliance with our wholesale agreements, we deem it best to refrain from direct business with private consumers.

For your information, there are many retailers in your vicinity who carry cameras. Attached please find a list of said dealers.

Hoping you understand.

Yours truly,

Dear Mr Ali:

We have received your order for a 35mm camera but, unfortunately, must return your cheque.

As a manufacturer, we sell cameras only to dealers, with whom we have very explicit wholesale agreements.

Nevertheless, we sincerely appreciate your interest in our product. We are therefore enclosing a list of retailers in your community who carry a full line of our cameras. Any one of them will be happy to serve you.

Sincerely yours,

Clarity

- Clarity means getting your message across so that the receiver will understand what you are trying to convey.

Clichés

- Here are some of the more popular clichés; use them sparingly– only when you’re sure they best express your intent
 - All things being equal
 - Break the ice
 - Business as usual
 - By leaps and bounds
 - By rule of thumb

Construct effective sentences and paragraphs.

- At the core of clarity is the sentence. A sentence moves thought clearly within a paragraph. Important characteristics are as follows:
 - Length
 - Unity
 - Coherence
 - Vague: Being the chief executive, we can expect help from you.
 - Clear: Being the chief executive, you can surely help us.
 - Emphasis
 - Little Emphasis: The order was received and the manager started preparing for it.
 - Better Emphasis: As the letter was received, the manager started preparing for it.

CORRECTNESS

- The correctness principle is more than proper grammar, punctuation and spelling.
- A message may be perfect grammatically mechanically but still lose a customer and fail to achieve a purpose. Though mistakes are never intentional, they spoil our image. Errors in the messages fall in the following categories:
 - ❖ Mistakes in names, figures, facts, and words.
 - ❖ Mistakes in punctuation and capitalization
 - ❖ Mistakes in the level of Language

Mistakes in names, figures, facts, and words

- Any mistakes in names, figures, facts, etc, can make your message unclear. Such mistakes can also create problems for you. Imagine if you write 2000 where you were supposed to write 200.
- Mistakes in punctuation and capitalization must be avoided.
- So be careful to:
 - Verify your statistical data.
 - Double-check your totals.
 - Avoid guessing at laws that have an Impact on you and your receiver.

Mistakes in the level of Language

- There are two types of writings: formal and informal. In formal writing, our style is unconvivial. In informal writing, we use words that are short, familiar and conversational.
- A formal style is characterized by more complex sentences.
- An informal style is characterized by Short words and sentences (Thanks a lot for your letter).
- Contraction & Abbreviations (I haven't, there's) simple words.

Correctness:

At the core of correctness is proper

- Grammar
- Punctuation
- Spelling

The term correctness applied to business messages also means the following characteristics.

- Use the right level of language
- Check accuracy of figures, facts and words
- Maintain acceptable writing mechanics

- Maintain acceptable writing mechanics

Formal Writing

Formal writing is often associated with scholarly writing.

Examples

doctoral dissertations, scholarly articles, top-level government agreements etc

The style unconventional, usually impersonal, and contains long and involved sentences.

Informal Writing

This style of writing is more characteristic in business writing.

An example is the communications via E-mail, memos etc.

More Formal	Less Formal
Participate	Join
Procure	Get
Utilize	Use
Interrogate	question
Endeavor	try

Reminder:

- Avoid substandard language.
- Using incorrect words, incorrect grammars, faulty pronunciation all suggest inability to use good English.

Substandard	More Appropriate
Ain't	Isn't
Can't hardly	Can hardly
Aim at proving	Aim to prove
Stoled	Stolen
Irregardless	Regardless

Check accuracy of figures, facts and words

- It is impossible to convey the meaning of the words precisely, through words, from the head of the sender to the receiver.
- Our goal is to be as precise as possible.

A good check of data is to have another person read and comment on the validity of the material.

Figures and Facts

- Verify your statistical data.
- Double check your totals.
- Avoid guessing at Laws that have an impact on you.

Continued....

- Have someone else read your message if the topic involves data.
- Determine whether a fact has changed overtime.

Words that confuse

English language is constantly changing.

Though dictionaries cannot keep up with rapid change, but still are the most useful resource for finding correct words.

Example:

a, an

Use a before consonant and consonant sounds or a long a sound. Use an before vowels or silent b sounds.

Example

accept, except

Accept is a verb that means receive.

Except is a verb that relates to omitting out or leaving out.

Example:

Between, Among

Between involves two people, among, three or more.

Example:

Farther, further

Farther is used to express more distance in space, further for distance in time, quality or degree.

Example:

Biannually, biennially

Biannually mean two time a year, biennially means every two years.

Maintain Acceptable Writing Mechanics

All material relating to mechanics, word processing and appearance is relevant here.

A careful attention to the mechanical part of every well-written document.

Conciseness

Eliminate wordy expressions

- To avoid wordy expressions, use single words whenever possible. Here are some examples of how word economy saves the reader's time and effort.
 - Wordy: I want to take this opportunity to tell you that we are grateful to you
 - Concise: Thank you
 - Wordy: We are grateful and appreciative
 - Concise: We look forward with anticipation to...
 - Avoid trite, "which" that clauses whenever possible
 - We wan to buy chairs which are of the executive types
 - We want to buy executive type chairs

Include only relevant material

- Your reader will lose interest in your message if he/she finds irrelevant things in your message. Using only well-chosen words can help you convey relevant facts.
- Avoid, information obvious to the reader
- Avoid long introduction, excessive adjectives, pompous works

Conciseness

Avoid unnecessary repetition.

- Avoid repetition by using pronouns, short names or acronyms, etc.
- Stick to the purpose of the message.
- Writing concisely means using only necessary, meaningful words.

Conciseness is saying what you want to say in the fewest possible words without sacrificing the other C qualities.

- A concise message saves time and expense for both the sender and the receiver.
- It increases emphasis in the message.
- It shows respect for the recipient, by not cluttering them unnecessary information.

To achieve conciseness, observe the following suggestions.

- Eliminate wordy expressions

2. Delete irrelevant words and rambling sentences.
3. Omit information obvious to the reader.
4. Avoid long introductions, unnecessary explanations, pompous words and gushy politeness.
5. Get to the important point tactfully and concisely.

Example:

Wordy : We hereby wish to let you know that our company is pleased with the confidence you have reposed in us.

Concise : We appreciate your confidence.

Avoid unnecessary Repetition

Unnecessary repetition leads to dullness.

Use short names when you have mentioned the long one once. For Shaukat Khanum Memorial Cancer Hospital, use Shaukat Khanum or simply the Hospital.

2. Use initials instead of repeating long names. Instead of using Pakistan International Airlines, use PIA.
3. Cut out needless repetition of phrases or sentences.
Sometimes it is possible to combine two or even three sentences using subordinate clauses or phrases.

Example:

•The following letter is from a business executive in a Company for 5 years

Will you ship us some time, anytime during the month of October would be fine, or even November if you are rushed (November would suit us just as well, in fact a little bit better) 300 of the regular Dell Computers.

Thank you in advance for sending these along in parcel post, and not in express, as express is too expensive.

Concise Version of the Letter:

Please ship parcel post, before the end of November 300 Dell Computers.

Conciseness Checklist:

- Use one word in place of phrases; one sentence in place of two. Read out loud to listen for wordiness.
- Omit outdated trite expressions.
- Ask yourself: what material is really relevant?
- Look for unnecessary repetition: Does the same word or idea appear too often?

Recognizing incorrect words

1. Simple words. Rewrite the following sentences, substituting simple words for the underlined words and phrases in the sentences

A conference call will afford us an opportunity to interrogate the numerous remuneration proposals and consummate the rumors.

2. Concise words. Delete the extra words and rewrite these sentences.

I want to take this opportunity to thank you for arranging to send me a computer that is exactly identical to the one in my office. This letter is to acknowledge receipt of and thank you for your check no 389939 in the amount of Rs. 1000.

3. We have 30 reservations at the present writing, so I am taking the liberty of sending you an updated list.
4. Correct words. Substitute correct words for the underlined words that are incorrect.
Between you and I she has a long ways to go to be a realator. Irregardless of the person which you select, I am real pleased with the candidates. I don't have but two pair of shoes.

Courtesy

- Courtesy does not mean the use of old-fashioned expressions such as ‘your kind enquiry’, ‘thank you’ and ‘please’. Rather, it is politeness that grows out of respect and concern for others. Courtesy is a quality that enables a request to be refused without killing all hope of future business. Courtesy also means replying promptly to all letters. If you feel your correspondent’s comments are unfair, try to answer tactfully. In short, the whole letter should have a courteous tone. It is not what you say, it is how you say it.
- The following are suggestions for producing a courteous tone:
 - ❖ Be sincerely tactful, thoughtful, and appreciative
 - ❖ Use expressions that show respect
 - ❖ Choose nondiscriminatory expressions

Be sincerely tactful, thoughtful, and appreciative

- Sometimes you have to deal with unpleasant messages. Always remember that by using tact and being thoughtful you can convey anything, however unpleasant it may be, to your readers.
- We have believe that the extent of your current obligations makes you a bad credit risk.
- Our credit department believes that, because of your current obligations additional credit might be difficult for you to handle at this time.

Use expressions that show respect

- Expressions like, ‘irresponsible’ or ‘I do not agree with’ etc., are annoying. Use expressions that show respect for your reader and help him think positively about your message.

Courtesy

Choose nondiscriminatory expressions

- Courtesy also requires use of nondiscriminatory expressions that refer to any particular, gender, race, ethnic. origin, etc.

Instead of these gender-specific words.	Choose these Bias Free words
Businessman	Business person or business worker
Chairman	Chair, chairperson, worker, employee
Manpower	Worker, employee
Newsman	Newscaster or reporter or journalist
Salesman	Salesperson, sales, representative, agent

Courtesy

Singular Pronoun

He	Him
Each customer will be notified his bill	Customers will be notified on their bills (rewarded into the plural)

CONSIDERATION

Dear Mr Naeem

We have been pleased to sell fine furniture items for more than two decades. We supply the finest products to customers from all over the country. We are proud to be the only dealer in this area for both the AB & Co and BC & Co. Our record shows at least a ten percent increase in sales every year since Classic furniture was founded in 1965.

Consideration

- Consideration means writing every letter with your reader in mind. It also means acting on the 'you attitude'. When we put ourselves in our reader's place, we are considerate. We can understand our reader's desires, problems, circumstances and emotions. This thoughtful consideration is exactly 'you attitude'. Three specific ways to indicate consideration are:
 - ❖ Focus on 'you' instead of 'I' and 'we'
 - ❖ Show audience benefits or interest
 - ❖ Emphasize positive, pleasant facts

Consideration

Focus on 'you' instead of 'I' and 'we'

- For writing considerate message, think how your reader will benefit from your messages. For example.
 - 'I' or 'We' attitude: we are delighted to announce.....
 - 'You' attitude: you will be pleased to know.....

Show audience benefits or interest

- Your reader is likely to response positively when you show them benefits. Even in conveying unfavourable message to your reader, you can plan it in a way the reader finds some benefit in it.

Emphasize positive, pleasant facts

- Another way to show 'you attitude' for your reader is to present facts in a positive, pleasant way. For example;

I know you'll be delighted with the unique carry-on bag Mr Hassan. It's not only very handsome, but incredibly inexpensive.

You're very sincerely

Completeness

- A business message is complete when it contains all facts that the reader or listener needs for the reaction you desire. Senders and receivers are influenced by their background, viewpoint, needs, experience, attitude, status and emotions. Because of their difference, the receiver needs to be sure that he has included all relevant information. Completeness is closely related to clarity.
- A complete message brings desired result. It does a better job of building goodwill. It helps remove costly lawsuits that may result if important information is missing. Moreover, the communication that seems unimportant can be surprisingly important if the information is complete and effective.
- For completeness, keep the following guideline in mind:
 - ❖ Provide all necessary information
 - ❖ Answer all questions asked
 - ❖ Give something extra when desirable

Completeness

Provide all necessary information

- Your reader needs to know how much, what size, what type, and other details. To achieve this clarity, your message should answer the "five Ws and one H"

Answer all questions asked

- Replying to an inquiry or request, answer all questions asked, and even anticipate the reader's reaction by providing other relevant information.

Give something extra when desirable

- Sometimes, as an intelligent writer, you know what your reader may need to know about any certain thing. In this case you must include anything that is of your reader's benefit.

Concreteness

- Concreteness means that a message is specific, definite and vivid. If a message lacks these qualities, it will be vague and general. To achieve concreteness, denotative words will be used instead of connotative words. By using concrete facts and figures, you can make your reader know exactly what is required or desired. Concrete messages are more richly textured. They avoid vagueness.
- The following guideline should help you compose concrete, convincing message.
 - ❖ Use specific facts and figures
 - ❖ Put active verbs in the sentences

1. Use specific facts and figures

Always use specific facts and figures in your messages. For example:

Vague: Please send us the following items by the end of this month.

Clear: The following items should reach us on or before 21 August.

2. Put active verbs in the sentences

- Active verbs make writing forceful and more interesting to read or hear.

Passive: The proposal was approved.

Active: The general manager approved the proposal.

Concreteness

Active verbs also make sentence specific, personal and concise.

1. Specific. "The chief executive decided" is more explicit than "A decision has been made."

2. Personal. "You will note" is both personal and specific; "it will be noted" is impersonal."

3. Concise. The passive requires more words and thus slows both writing and reading. Compare "Figures show" with "it is shown by figures."

4. Emphatic. Passive verbs dull action. Compare "The students held a contest" with "a contest was held by the students."

Concreteness

1. When you want to avoid person, blunt accusations or comments. "Attendance at the meeting is required" is less harsh than "you must attend".

2. When you want to stress the object of the action. "You are invited" is better than "we invite you"

3. When the doer isn't important in the sentence. "People were asked to take their seats".

Use verbs not nouns

Seven verbs be, give, have, hold, made, put and take may be avoid as they introduce an action hidden

Concreteness

Action in the verb

This office collects bad debts

Put action in verb, not in infinitive

Action in infinitive

The main function of this machine is to speed up production.

Action in the verbs.

The machine speeds up production.

Intercultural Communication

1. What do you think of a culture in which people sign their last names first?
2. What is your reaction when two signatures appear at the bottom of a business letter?
3. Why don't people put the month first, then the day, rather than day first, then the month?
4. What is your impression of a foreign letter that is intentionally not concise?
5. Some salutations are overly formal; so are endings. Is that a concern when your letters have been more casual?
6. How do you react to long sentences in letters when you were taught to write shorter sentences?
7. What's your reaction when a letter ends without a clear statement of purpose or action?
8. What is your feeling toward a meeting in which there is little discussion and little comment until the senior and usually older person speaks and recommends an answer?
9. How do you react when writing problems such as errors in choice of verb tense, prepositions, and articles frequently occur in writing?

Intercultural Communication

Globalization means that for a Company to survive, it must establish markets not only in its own country but also in many foreign countries.

Thus employees must understand other cultures as well as their own country's ethnic diversity.

This chapter introduces you to three fundamental topics as a basis for communicating effectively with people from the other countries.

1. Background to intercultural communication
2. National cultural variables

Intercultural Communication

To an understanding of the total communication process. It is important to have the concept of background which means those aspects that can either impede or aid effective communication: Language, Culture, Status, Education and Age.

Each person and each country have its own written and unwritten rules of behaviour including instruction in communication.

It is more comfortable to work with people of your own country. But International Communication demands work with many foreign countries and people.

Intercultural CommunicationBackground to Intercultural Communication

Many personal and national variables affect both senders and receivers of messages.

INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATION

A Concept of Culture

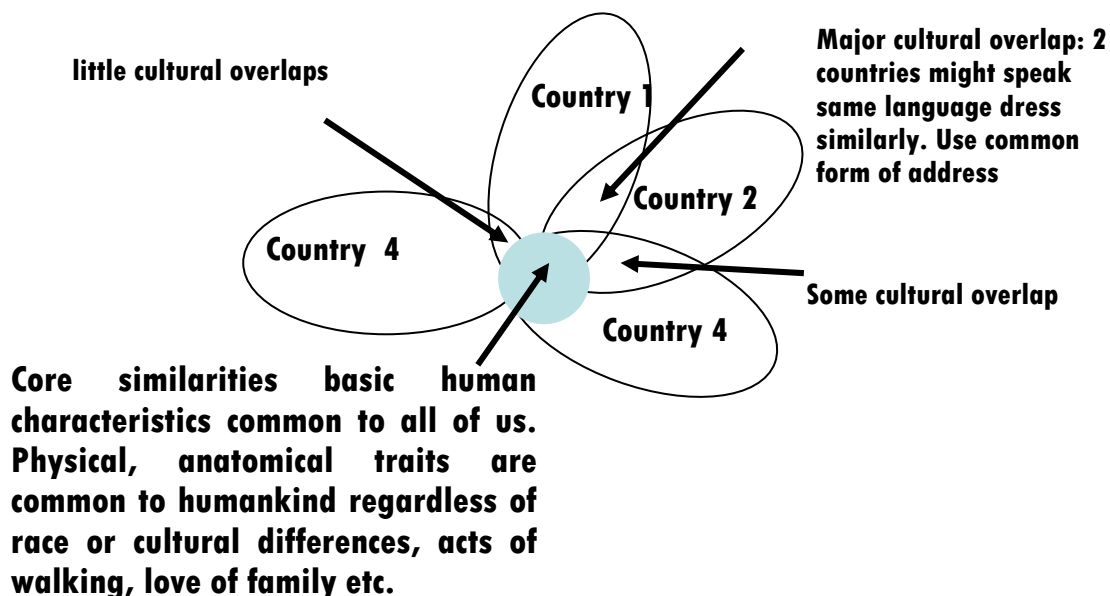

Culture refers to the behavioral characteristic typical of a group this definition implies that communication, oral and nonverbal within a group also are typical of that group and are unique.

Ethnocentrism: judging other group or countries by the cultural standards, of your group.

Cultural generalizations applicable to an entire national are impossible. Knowing core characteristics of a country are basic to better international communication.

An Intercultural Communication Model

Studies have long determined that all of us are more comfortable with persons we know and who hold similar beliefs. Lets look at the figure:

An Intercultural Communication Model

United States	Other Cultures
Concern with diversity	Less tolerance for diversity
Tendency to be obsessed with time	time is flexible
Expect answers, quickly to faxes, letters, or email	Fax and E-mail slowly increasing in developing countries
Few vacation periods	Many vacation days (about 17 in some countries).
Legalistic letter	more informal; a handshake is as good as a letter
Early starting time for work	start working later in the day

An Intercultural Communication Model

United States	Other Cultures
Much use of slang	less use of slang
Prefer deductive: it gets to the point more quickly.	prefer inductive: it is less arrogant
Prefer paragraph headings and visual divisions	Prefer bullets or numbers
Rank is less important	rank is important.

An Intercultural Communication Model

Ethnic diversity within a country plays a part

Before drawing conclusions from cultural data, it is necessary to consider many factors: a single cause rarely produces a valid conclusion.

An Intercultural Communication Model

National Cultural Variable

While communicating, the message sender and the receiver are both affected by external and internal stimuli. Communicating with business people in a foreign country you must realize that overall national and individual cultural differences within the culture further affect these stimuli.

An Intercultural Communication Model

Following are the global or macro constraints and variables that communicators must face when working with foreign receivers of their messages.

Some National Variables Individual Cultural Variables

Education	Time
Regulation	Space
Economics	Food
Politics	Accepted Dress
Social Norms	Manners
Language	Decision Making

Education

Many managers in foreign countries are not very well educated. Most Asian and Chinese managers have had a less formal education than American and European managers.

Education levels of Chinese, Asian, and US Managers

	Chinese	Asian	US
Less than high school	5.4	2.5	0.1
High school graduate	31.8	12.4	3.2
Some college	34.5	19.4	16.9
Undergraduate degree	27.6	65.4	79.8
Postgraduate degree	0.7	25.0	30.0

Before drawing conclusions from data, it is necessary to consider many factors. Percent of managers recommending specific courses as very important preparation for general management.

Course	US	Asian	China
Oral Communication	79.5%	71.8%	8.6%
Written Communication	78.0	69.7	8.0

1. Attitudes towards education

- What is the level of education of middle managers?
- To what degree is education of women supported in the country?
- Does education constitute a significant portion of the national budget?

Law and Regulations

In both the developed and developing nations, various government regulations affect business communications and the sale of products. For example advertising directed at children is restricted in the United States, Canada, and Scandinavia; also, Other countries, such as France, Mexico, and the Province of Quebec, have a restriction on the use of foreign languages in advertisements.

In some Muslim countries fashion magazines are not allowed in many countries, and cosmetic makeup is also prohibited.

1. Laws and regulations: degree of formality

- To what extent are the laws of the country codified?
- Is there uniform enforcement for the laws and regulations of the country?
- Are the laws and regulations of your country accepted and enforced?

Economics

Availability of capital and transportation and the standard of living per capita vary from nation to nation. The opportunity to borrow money, the rate of inflation, and the exchange rates influence business and a country's ability to communicate concerning that business.

In the US free enterprise system, competitors usually set their own prices. In contrast, OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries), as a Cartel, sets oil prices.

Some Japanese businesses check with the government before initiating major production and trading changes.

Economics: Past history and projections

- Which economic changes have occurred within the past 5 years that will affect the future?
- Is the government supportive of the economic changes occurring?
- How welcome are outside investors in your host country?

Politics

Even concepts of democracy will vary as interpreted in Korea, the Philippines, or Great Britain. The sweeping political changes in government will affect future business relations.

The event – such as antigovernment demonstrations, arrests, assassinations, elections, exile, general strikes, guerrilla warfare, government crises, revolutions and riots – are important in determining the stability of a country.

Politics:

- a. which political changes have occurred within the past 5 years?
- b. how supportive is the government of outside investors? of joint ventures?
- c. what are the protocols, the conventions individuals must respect in the host country?

Religion

Be careful of religious beliefs within foreign countries. Although some basic beliefs overlap, there are some major differences. In connection with religion there is great need for tolerance. Buddhism, Hinduism, and Moslem religions are found in many parts of the world, affecting the values (and attire) of people professing these faiths. For instance, these three religions forbid consumption of alcohol;

Religious holidays affect international communication, interrupting work schedules or delaying responses to requests

Be aware too that religion can affect the status of women; their positions within an economy and even their buying patterns and habits of dress.

Religion: Homogeneity and diversity of belief structure

- a. Are you aware of the major religious beliefs that could affect your business relationships?
- b. will the religious holidays affect your rhythm of conducting business?
- c. what personal behavior is acceptable and nonacceptable?

Social Norms

In various ways any national environmental constraints – education, law and regulations, economics, politics, religion – affect a nation's social norms. In many countries a male line of the family profoundly influences some business decisions. Decisions, buying patterns, pooling of resources, special interests affect behavior and business communication.

Beyond the immediate family a bond may exist between persons, based on caste, class, age, or even special interests. Be aware of a nation's social norms.

Social Norms: importance of family, influence of past colonial influences:

- a. are you aware of the social hierarchies of the country?
- b. Is there a rank order of importance for participants at meetings?
- c. Who will really make the business decision?
- d. Which country's influence is still evident after previous colonial control?

Language

An important constraint that undergirds all the preceding variables is language. Obviously, unless both sender and receiver understand a common language, the opportunities for successful business communication are significantly limited.

Language

English is a world language – and to a major extent the language of business.

Language problems are often core to communication misunderstanding.

Language: Use of English and other languages used in business relationships:

- a. Is it necessary to have an interpreter at business sessions?
- b. is English understood at the oral or written level?
- c. Is there a protocol to follow for formal and informal communication.

Individual Cultural Variables

He or she exhibits a unique lifestyle of personal habits and ethnic diversity. Thus, within each culture, on the micro and more personal level, are differences in verbal and nonverbal cues expressed through varying concepts of time, individual speech, food, acceptable dress, managers at home and at work, decision-making patterns, and other nonverbal variations.

Time (Chronemics)

Persons in Latin America and the Middle East treat time more casually than do Americans, prefer promptness. Germans are time-precise. In Latin America – and in Buddhist cultures – you may wait an hour; just reflecting a different concept of time; arriving late is a social accepted custom.

Individual Cultural Variables

Even when referring to seasons of a year, countries differ.

It should not take you long to recognize which is the time conscious culture and which is the one less concerned with precision in time. Knowing cultural perceptions of time helps you understand why some responses are slow – by your standards.

Perceptions of time

- Is the concept of time considered linear or circular?
- What impact will time have upon business decisions?
- Is time considered valuable or an intangible asset?

Individual Cultural Variables

Culture I	Culture II
“Let’s get on with it.”	“Manana” (tomorrow)
“Time-saving devices”.	“Efficient devices”.
“In how many minutes can you get here?”	“What will be will be.”
“Let’s set a phone appointment for 8:15.”	“We’ll give you a call.”
“The future is now.”	“The old way is a good way.”
“Live for today.”	“Traditions should be honored.”
“8:15”	“Some time tomorrow”
“You’re late.”	“Oh? Didn’t know I was.”
“Dinner at eight.”	“See you when we get there.”

Individual Cultural Variables

Space (Proxemics)

How close may strangers stand to you?

How do you react in Saudi Arabia when someone’s breath intentionally brushes you in conversation?

How do you like being literally pushed into a train in Tokyo?

How would you react hanging onto the outside of a bus in Pakistan?

How do you react to the cold stare of a German as your eyes invade the privacy of his or her yard?

Some cultures consider those who stand close to you as intrusive, rude, pushy, overbearing.

Concepts of office space differ

Perception of space – What is the average acceptable personal space between natives of the host country?

INDIVIDUAL CULTURAL VARIABLES

Food

It may be a good idea prior to visiting your host country to visit various ethnic restaurants in your home country. Then you'll have an initial idea as to the kinds of foods available: how they are served, fixed or eaten.

Perceptions of Food

- Are you aware of the eating habits of your hosts?
- Are there table conventions you should be aware of?
- Are there foods you might find disagreeable?

Individual Cultural Variables

Acceptable Dress

It is better to ask about the mode of dress for an occasion in your host country than to risk making an embarrassing mistake.

In most American businesses men wear the business suit whereas women wear dresses or tailored suits.

Some British people might still wear the bowler along with a dark suit and carry an umbrella.

In Middle East long cotton coat are acceptable.

Perception of Dress

- How much skin may be exposed in both an informal and in a formal situation?
- Are certain colors disturbing?
- Will western attire be accepted?

Individual Cultural Variables

Manners

Knowing manner is also very important. Children shake your hand in Germany, hug you in Italy, and often stay in the background in Pakistan/India. In fact, the ritual of the greeting and the farewell is more formal in many countries with children and adults. You avoid gifts of red roses in Germany or white chrysanthemums in France, Belgium and Japan.

Be prepared to sit close together in Asia. In Saudi Arabia sons

Defer to their fathers. At the heart of their system is the family.

Perceptions of Manners

- What is the protocol regarding the introduction of persons in a business situation?
- What are the "rules" of gift giving?

Individual Cultural Variables

Decision Making

Patience – above all – is needed in intercultural communication, in doing business with other countries. Americans are typecast as moving too quickly in asking for a decision. Give more thought to inductive communication.

Americans are accused of being brusque, curt, impolite; we wish to get to the point – fast, "Getting down to business" is a trait of the western culture. The Germans, Singaporeans, Swiss, Dutch, and Scandinavians are similar, quickly getting to the issue. Chinese, Pakistani, French, and British prefer more pleasuring social amenities.

In Japan, decision time is held back as group consensus moves toward a decision.

Individual Cultural Variables

Ringi process (stamps of approval by many people on a proposal)

Your understanding of the decision process – add to your success in dealing with a foreign environment.

Perceptions of decision making

- a. Is the pattern for making decisions consistent from one company to another?
- b. Is placement of the major decision maker consistent in meeting situations?
- c. Is an inductive or a deductive pattern of decision making preferred?

Verbal and Nonverbal Communication

Verbal

A kind of verbal sparring occurs when strangers meet each seeking to determine which topics are acceptable and uncontroversial the tone of voice of one's initial words can influence your initial perception of whether the meeting is positive or negative 'see you later' can mean the same day to Asian workers or some indefinite time in the future to Americans

Arabs are loud and some Japanese use little volume

Cantonese demand more volume to suggest changes in word meaning

Verbal and Nonverbal Communication

A. Accept cultural differences

1. studying your own culture
2. Learn about other cultures through books, articles, videos, and other resources.
3. encourages employees to discuss their culture's customs
4. Avoid being judgmental
5. Create a formal forum to teach employees about the customers of all cultures represented in the firm reader's forum.
6. Train employees to see and overcome ethnocentric stereotyping.

Verbal and Nonverbal Communication

B. improve oral and written communications

1. define the terms people need to know on the job
2. emphasize major points with repetition and reape.
3. Use familiar words whenever possible.
4. Be concise.
5. Don't cover too much information at one time.
6. Adjust your message to employees' education level.
7. Be specific and explicit – using descriptive words, exact measurements, and examples when possible.
8. Give the reason for asking employees to follow a certain procedure and explain what will happen if the procedure is not followed.
9. Use written summaries and visual aids (when appropriate) to clarify your points.
10. Demonstrate and encourage the right way to complete a task, use a tool, and so on.
11. Reduce language barriers: Train managers in the language of their employees, train employees in the language of most customers and of most people in the company, ask bilingual employees to serve as translators, print important health and safety instructions in as many languages as necessary.

C. Assess how well you've been understood

1. Research the nonverbal reactions of other cultures; then be alert to facial expressions and other nonverbal signs that indicate confusion or embarrassment.
2. Probe for comprehension.
3. Encourage employees to ask questions in private and in writing.
4. Observe how employees use the information you've provided, and review any misunderstood points.

D. Offer feedback to improve communication

1. Focus on the positive by explaining that should be done rather than what shouldn't be done.
2. Discuss a person's behaviors and the situation, rather than making a judgment about the person.
3. Be supportive as you offer feedback, and reassure individuals that their skills and contribution are important

A Kind of verbal sparring occurs when we judge people to a great extent by their voice. Some native languages demand many tonal variations, giving the impression to a nonnative of loudness, even arrogance.

Nonverbal

A Myriad of nonverbal symbols exist for every culture, even in subcultures. Knowing the major desirable and undesirable cues helps knowing both intended and unintended communication errors.

Oral Team reports on a Country's Variables that May affect Business and communication. Appoint several teams within the class. Each time is responsible for selecting a single country and then orally reporting the class some of that country's national environmental variables that may affect business and communication. A possible outline might include the following points:

PROCESS OF PREPARING EFFECTIVE BUSINESS MESSAGES

While preparing a written or an oral business message, you need to plan, organize, compose, edit and revise it. The message must also be proofread and corrected before it is mailed. Apart from the steps mentioned above the writer must take care of seven C qualities and also of legal aspect. Careful preparation of communication is important, even if the writer / speaker has the modern technology. The basic planning steps are as follows:

Five Planning Steps

Before writing a message, the following steps are necessary for effective communication.

1. Define the purpose of the message.
2. Analyze your audience – readers or listeners.
3. Choose the ideas to include.
4. Collect all the facts to back up these ideas.
5. Outline – organize – your message.

1. Define the purpose of the message.

i. General Purpose

To inform, to persuade, to collaborate with your audience

This deters the amount of audience participation and amount of control you have over your message.

to inform: you control is high you inform you need with interaction. Audience absorb or reject the information to persuade: you require a moderate amount of participation / moderate amount of control.

to collaborate: with audience you need maximum participation / you control is minimal.

Specific purpose

That purpose you be clear and straightforward.

To achieve this are you self what you want to achieve / accomplish with your message and what your audience should think after receiving the message.

Is your purpose realistic

Is this the right time?

Is the right person delivering the message?

Is your purpose acceptable to your organization?

2. Analyze your audience – readers or listeners.

It is very important to write the message to the recipient's views and needs. You might or might not have met the recipient. It is better to visualize the individual. Try to picture that person – business or professional person or labourer, superior (boss) colleague, or subordinate, man or woman, new or longtime customer, young, middle-aged, or elderly client. Also, consider the person's educational level, attitudes, and so on. If the message is for many people, try to find some common characteristics. In all communications, the areas must be considered on which the recipient is likely to be well informed or uninformed, pleased or displeased, positive, negative, or neutral, interested or uninterested and unreceptive.

Ask yourself some key questions about your audience

1. Who are they?
2. What is their probable reaction to your message.
3. How much do they already know about the subject?
4. What is their relationship to your Audience profile

1. Who is your primary audience?
2. How big is your audience?
3. What is your audience's composition?
4. What is your audience's level of understanding?
5. What is your audience's probable reaction?

PROCESS OF PREPARING EFFECTIVE BUSINESS MESSAGES

3. Choose the ideas to include.

While answering a letter, one can underline the main points to discuss and get the ideas briefly on a pad. If one is writing unsolicited or a complex message, one can begin by listing ideas as they come to mind. Then most important facts can be changed into message. It is better that the message written to welcome a customer should have other incentives or policies what the firm offers.

- * Consider your reader's viewpoint (be in his place)
- * Read company's document
- * Talk with your colleagues, customer etc.
- * Ask your audience for input

4. Collect all the facts to back up these ideas.

After the main ideas, the writer / speaker should ask himself what specific facts, updated figures or quotations he needs. The knowledge of the company's policies, procedures, and product details is necessary for an effective communication. A brochure, table picture, or product sample is also useful to enclose.

Find out

- * be sure the information is accurate
- * be sure the information is ethical
- * be sure the information is pertinent
- * select appropriate channel

5. Outline – organize – your message.

The order in which the ideas are to be presented is as important as the ideas themselves. Disorganized writing reflects disorganized, illogical thought process or careless preparation.

Choose the organizational plan after the purpose has been finalized collecting all necessary facts. Ask yourself: "How will the reader or listener react to these ideas?".

Beginnings & EndingsDear Mr. Hassan,

You are right to expect high-quality merchandise from The Automatic Door Company; we try to give you the best for your money and to stand behind our products when they fail as a result of defects in material and workmanship, as our warranty states.

We appreciate your sending the door opener to us for analysis. It appears that the opener has got wet. Excess moisture over a period of time causes this defect.

Our service manager estimates that cleaning and repairing your door opener would cost Rs. 250.

Since your door opener is several years old, you may want to consider buying a new one. We have made many improvements to our door openers since yours was manufactured, including a sealed circuit board that would prevent the possibility of damage from moisture. A new door opener, which costs Rs. 3500.00 postpaid, should give you even longer service than your old one did.

Please let us know whether you want us to repair or replace your opener.

Yours sincerely,

Beginnings & Endings

Beginnings & Endings

The way you begin your message makes it clear whether your reader will respond favourably or unfavourably to the message. When you are sure that your message has something favourable or neuter for the reader, you must begin your message with the main idea or good-news in the beginning. The opening must be impressive in a way that it captures the attention of the reader. So always choose appropriate openings that suit the purpose of your message. The following openings are desirable in direct-request, good-news and neutral messages.

Main Idea: The goods which you ordered on March 5 have been sent to you by passenger train.

Request: So that your order can be filled promptly, please send another copy of the requisition.

Announcement: Now you can take an air – conditioned coach from Lahore to Islamabad any hour.

Whenever required, employ 5Ws and one H to give clarity to your messages.

Buffer: If you have bad news, begin your message with a buffer. A buffer is a statement, that helps you bring your reader in a positive frame of mind, and the message becomes readable for the reader. But "Buffer" should be neutral in tone. You should also avoid misleading the reader into thinking that the message is good.

Poor: It is impossible to open your account unless you send us the following information.

With buffer: The moment you send us the following information your account will be opened.

Poor: We never exchange damaged goods.

With buffer: We are happy to exchange the merchandise that is returned to us in good condition.

In persuasive request (sales letter), begin the message with an attention-getting statement. An experienced writer uses some common technique to attract the reader. Consider some of attention-getting statements:

A challenge: Don't waste another day wondering how you're going to become the success you've always wanted to be!

The writer should avoid using trite and stereotyped expressions. Make your openings considerate, courteous concise, and clear. Keep your first paragraph short and use simple conversational language.

Never open your letter with an incomplete sentence like:

Reference to your letter of March 6 regarding opening of a current account.

Make opening specific

Poor: Thank you for your order.

Specific: Thank you for your order for 200 writing pads.

Close Paragraph

An effective ending will motivate the reader to act as requested. If no direct request is required, leave the reader with some expression of regard, assurance, appreciation or willingness to help. Always remember that closings should be strong, clear and polite. They should leave a sense of closure and goodwill with the receiver.

1. Make your request clear and complete with Five Ws and the H.
2. Include your phone number and extension if you want the reader to phone you.
3. Enclose a form (card, order, blank, or questionnaire) and an addressed reply envelope (perhaps with postage paid) if you want the reader to furnish something.
4. Give complete instructions regarding how and where if you do not include a form and envelope.
5. State your office hours and location if you want the reader to come to you in person. Do you have a free parking lot? Where?

Close Paragraph

1. Make Action

Vague: I look forward to hearing from you regarding this matter.

Better: So that we can make appropriate arrangements for your visit, please call me at 541000, before Friday, November 16, anytime between 9 A.M. and 5 P.M.

2. End on a Positive, Courteous Thought

Include Any Apologies and Negatives Before Last Paragraph. Study these examples:

Negative: I'm sorry we can't be more encouraging at this time.

Positive: We wish you success in your search for a position.

Be Friendly: Offer to help the reader further, if that is appropriate. Words like please or will you help soften commands.

Good: If there is any further way we can assist you please call 555-4567 Monday through Friday between 9 A.M. and 5 P.M.

Avoid: Thank you in advance for distributing these questionnaires to your employees.

Say: I will appreciate your distributing these questionnaires to your employees.

Give my regards to your lovely family. I enjoyed meeting them during the October conference.

3. Keep Last Paragraph Concise and Correct

Trim your last paragraph to five or fewer lines of complete sentences. Avoid unnecessary repetition.

In short letters, the writer often gives his message and stops without any special formality: Make your opening and closing paragraph shorter than average because the most important location in a letter is the opening. The second most important is the closing.

Composing the Messages

You have gone through the planning steps. You are ready to compose. Composing is the process of drafting your message. Your first draft is a bit difficult to write. But at least you have brought the most important information on paper. If you have time, look for opportunities to improve your ideas. When you feel confident that you can achieve your purpose, begin to write.

While composing the message, no two people do it the same way. Some people follow the outline and move from one point to other. Others go in a more circular style, putting their ideas down in less fixed organization. The best equipment available nowadays is a computer which allows you to make changes.

Style is the way you use words to achieve a certain overall impression. The right choice depends on the nature of your message and your relationship with the reader.

Revising your Message

If possible, let your writing “Cool off” for a while before you begin to evaluate and revise. In this process you add necessary information and remove unnecessary one. You also look at the organizational approach. You also check all seven Cs in it.

Besides, ask the following questions to yourself:

1. Does your message accomplish its purpose?
2. Have you chosen the most effective organizational plan?
3. Are your points supported by adequate material?
4. Is your language complete, concise, considerate, concrete, clear, courteous, and correct?
5. Have you used variety in sentence structure?

Editing & Proofreading your Messages

Editing means revising your message that is still in rough draft. It not only involves correcting spelling, grammar, punctuation and similar errors but also means much more. Editing requires looking at a written message critically to see if revising the content will improve it. Proofreading means checking the final copy to make sure it is free from errors.

Editing your message also means checking all paragraphs for good topic sentences and sound structure, grammar, spelling, and punctuation. Sometimes you will proofread your document several times to be sure that you have not missed any errors. Even minor mistakes, such as typographical errors, can reduce the effectiveness of your message and undermine your credibility.

Those writing in a second language can take one more step in proofreading material. Read your written material aloud. Most people who speak a second language are more competent in oral communication in their second language than in written.

If you identify weaknesses in these areas and correct them, you will be making the finishing touches that ensure that your written communication will be as close to perfect as possible.

THE APPEARANCE AND DESIGN OF BUSINESS MESSAGES

The electronic revolution is changing the way we communicate, and these changes include formats and conventions of written communication.

In the more traditional forms of written communication, your receiver will form an impression of you based on the overall appearance and format of the message. The medium used most often for written messages to person outside your organization is business letters.

Elements of appearance that help produce favourable reactions are appropriate stationery and correct letter parts and layouts.

Business Messages

Stationery & Envelopes

A good company uses a paper which is most often at least 25 percent cotton content. Its quality is usually 20-pound weight. The standard size is 8½ by 11 inches. Some legal firms use 8½ by 14 inches. The colour should be white, cream, or light gray.

Letterhead

A letterhead is a printed paper with the name and address of a person or organization. Modern letterheads usually occupy no more than 2 inches at the top of the page. Letterhead information should include the name, address, telephone number, etc. Sometimes nature of business and name of department are also included.

Azad

A comma or colon should be used after the salutation. Gentlemen should be used in writing to a company, organization or any group of men and women. "Mesdames" 'or' Ladies' should be used when writing to an organization made up entirely of women.

5. Body

Most letters are typed single-spaced, with two spaces between paragraphs, before and after the salutation and before the complimentary close. A short letter could be double-spaced with additional blank line spaces before and after the date and within the signature area. When second page is used, addressee's name, page number, and date is written at the top.

6. Complimentary Close Body

If the letter begins with a formal salutation (Sir, Dear Sir) it will close with "Yours faithfully".

If it begins with a personal name Dear Mr. Khan, it will close with "Yours sincerely". Yours truly or cordially are also used.

Informal closes as Warm regards, Best regards/wishes are also used. A comma is used after complimentary close.

It is related to the salutation, so the same degree of formality should be used in it. e.g.,

Salutation	Complimentary Close
Dear sir,	Yours sincerely,
Dear Madame,	Yours sincerely,
Sir,	Yours respectfully,

It is written two spaces below the last line of the body. In full block format, it is written on the left hand side of the page.

It helps the reader to know at a glance what the letter is about. The subject line may include or omit the word subject. It is placed below the salutations. It may be started from left hand margin or indented. The typing may be capitals or lowercase and underlined or all capitals. For example;

2. Full-Block
3. The Semi-Block
4. AMS (Administrative Management Society)

1. The Block-form / Modified – Block

This form is named so because inside address, salutation and paragraphs are blocked not indented in this form. If plain paper is being used, heading, date, complimentary close and signature are typewritten at the horizontal centre of the page. Place so that they end near the right hand margin.

First line of each paragraph is indented five to seven spaces. Only closed form of punctuation is used in this form. This letter style is attractive on the page.

4. AMS (Administrative Management Society)

It has been in use since 1950, AMS is simple style. It uses full-block form and open punctuation. No salutation or complimentary close is used. Reader's name, is used in the first and last sentences. Subject and writer's name are typed in capitals.

Punctuation Styles

1. Close Punctuation

Parts of heading, date, inside address, salutation and complimentary close are punctuated.

2. Standard Punctuation

Defining Email

Email refers to messages send over computers and includes everything from causal notes to friends to multimedia presentations send access the world.

Electronic mail (email) lets you send a message to a person without your making direct contact or knowing where that person is located. Subscribers to electronic mail services are called users, and as a user, you can access messages on your system from your home, office, hotel, or anywhere you happen to be.

Several basic components make up email systems, including

1. Users
2. Messages

1. Users

Users are often people, but users can also be other computer application programs.

2. Message

A message is the actual information send by one user to another.

3. Addresses

Part of the email information included in a message is the addresses of both sender and receiver, which include their unique identification codes along with another identifier such as the email systems, the mailbox number, or the organization.

4. Protocol

Each email system uses a protocol that describes the structure of the message, generally with a header of TO; FROM and SUBJECT; followed by the body, which may include text, images, graphics, video and audio.

5. Message Transport

The software that moves the message from one system to another in called the transport.

6. Gateways

If the message sent from one system must get to a user on another system, it must pass through a gateway to be delivered. A gateway is an application program that translates between two protocols of different email system.

7. Valued-added Networks (VANs)

Valued-added Networks (VANs) are public telecommunication companies, such as AT&T or PTCL, that handle email services to users for a fee.

8. Directory Systems

As a user, you can access directory that contains names, addresses, and sometimes other information about each user to find the email address you need to send a message.

Using email:

With email, you can reach individuals, groups, or other computers anywhere in the world to share information, files of data, spreadsheets, videos, music and anything else that can be sorted on a computer.

Email can save your time in printing, copying and distributing your message. You can use email to send and receive faxes and telexes.

Email is also useful in your personal communications.

Writing conventions for email are still developing, but one character is its being informal. The traditional conventions of writing are not followed in email.

Capitalization can vary from one email user to another; all punctuation and capitalization except for periods at the ends of sentences are omitted.

The immediacy and perceived informality of email compose rambling messages.

Understanding how Email Works

To send an email message, you do the following:

Log on. This means connecting to a computer, network, or email program. It requires the user's name and a password.

Choose the receivers of your message. For this step, you need to know the email addresses of your recipients.

Compose the message

Instruct the program to send the message.

Electronic Media

Advantage

Email offers speed, low cost, increased access to other employees, portability, and convenience (not just overcoming time-zone problems but carrying a message to many receivers at one). It's best for communicating brief, noncomplex information that is time sensitive, but its effectiveness depends on user skill. Because the turnaround time can be quite fast, email tends to be more conversational than traditional paper-based media.

Email Etiquette

Planning

Be clear, concise, and polite when you send an email message. Plan your email like letters and memos.

- Decide on the purpose
- Decide on the content
- Write all the ideas in point form
- Put these ideas into sequence appropriate to the purpose

Advantages and Disadvantages of Email

Advantages	Disadvantages
------------	---------------

Email is a faster and more efficient channel than regular mail (sometimes referred to as snail mail). Most messages reach anywhere in the world within minutes of being sent.	It can be difficult to distinguish between casual and formal messages because of their similar layout
It can be sent at any convenient time	There may be a time lag if the receiver does not read their email for a few days
It can be sent to different receivers at the same time	The system is inaccessible to those who are computer illiterate or not online.
Email can be stored and sent at off-peak telephone rates	Its contents may reappear later in a variety of printed forms.
It saves paper	It lacks nonverbal communication cues to add meaning
A message can be written and edited quickly by several people before it is sent	It can be overused

Elements of a Good Online Writing Style

Key element	Purpose	Strategies
Clarity	The communicate clearly	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Create single-subject messages whenever possible Open the email message with a sentence that either: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Connects it to previous correspondence, or Identifies its purpose, or Reflects an awareness of the reader's needs. Focus on the subject and purpose. Show the reader how the content affects them. Present new ideas clearly Arrange ideas in a logical sequence

Key element	Purpose	Strategies
Readability	To make information accessible	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Use about 15 to 20 words per sentence. Limit each sentence to one idea. Use complex sentences of 25 to 35 words sparingly as they require a high level of reading skill. Vary the length of sentences to add rhythm and interest to your writing. Use the active voice. Avoid slang. Remove ambiguous and unnecessary words Avoid technical terms unfamiliar to the reader.

Key element	Purpose	Strategies
Positive language	To create a positive first impression	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Use direct and courteous language Choose positive rather than negative words.

Punctuation	To keep the meaning clear	Start a sentence with a capital and end with a full stop. Check that the sentence is not too long. Separate ideas by using paragraphs. In general, use more full stops than commas.
Tone	To establish the communication climate	Avoid emotional responses (called 'flaming' in ITs). Use a courteous and tactful tone. Use an appropriate level of formality.

Electronic Media

Faxes

A facsimile machine scans a printed page, converts it to a signal, and transmits the signal over a telephone line to a receiving fax machine. Although faxes have been available for many years, until recently they were slow and expensive.

The oldest type of fax machine had to be connected to a machine of the same type, and the transmission took several minutes. Today's fax machines do not require the same kind of machine at the receiving end, and they can transmit a page in less than 1 minute. The newest fax machines use digital transmission, which makes it possible to use a computer program as a receiver. These new faxes are also much faster.

Voice Mail

Voice mail records messages on a computer disk for later retrieval by the receiver. When an incoming call is not answered, the system responds by telling the caller how to leave a message or how to reach someone else. The receiver of the call can then either listen to the machine upon returning to the office or access the message via telephone. This process eliminates the problem of telephone tag, which can be so frustrating.

Voice mail can be used:

- It replace short memos and phone calls that need no response
- It is most effective for short, unambiguous messages
- It solves time-zone difficulties
- Reduces a substantial amount of interoffice paperwork. Voice mail is
- A powerful tool when you need to communicate your emotion or tone
- It is especially useful for goodwill and other positive messages

Other Communication Technologies

Groupware

Groupware allows several people to use software at the same time to create documents, keep track of projects, route messages, and manage deadlines. Groupware enables a supervisor to manage work flow via individual computers instead of physically moving people from place to place or having face-to-face meetings.

CD-ROM database

Compact Disk – Read Only Memory (CD-ROM) has been available for several years and is becoming more popular. It is a powerful tool for putting masses of information in a form that is easy to digest. Some kinds of information typically found on CD-ROMs are encyclopedias, dictionaries, telephone directories, and articles and abstracts on various subjects. A CD-ROM can store more than 100,000 pages of text. It will continue to grow.

Teleconferencing

It is a rapidly developing technology that will eventually change the way companies do business

Teleconferencing is

- Best for informational meetings,
- Ineffective for negotiation
- Efficient alternative to a face-to-face meeting
- Discourages the “secondary” conversations
- Helps a participant focus on a topic but prevents participants from sharing valuable information.

Videotape

Videotape is often effective for getting a motivational message out to a large number of people. By communicating nonverbal cues, it can strengthen the sender’s image of sincerity and trustworthiness; however, it offers no opportunity for immediate feedback.

Computer Conferencing

Computer conferencing allows users to meet and collaborate in real time while viewing and sharing documents electronically. It offers democracy because more attention is focused on ideas than on who communicates them. But overemphasizing a message (to the neglect of the person communicating it) can threaten corporate culture, which needs a richer medium.

BASIC ORGANIZATIONAL PLANS

Direct (Deductive) Approach

When you think that your audience will be interested in what you have to say or willing to cooperate with you, you can use the direct or deductive plan to organize your message. It means your present request or the main idea in the beginning, which follows up necessary details and then you close your message with a cordial statement of action you want. We use this approach when the request requires no special tact or persuasion. Close to direct request is good-news plan that is used to grant requests, announce favourable or neutral information and exchange routine information within or between organizations. Look at the outline of direct organizational plans and good-news plan.

Basic Organizational Plans

Direct-Request Plan	Good-News Plan
1. State the request or main idea.	1. Best news or main idea.
2. Give necessary desirable details for easy reading.	2. Explain necessary and desirable details with any helpful material.
3. Close with a cordial request for specific action.	3. End positively and friendly stating clearly the desired action and offering any further help. Give date of action if necessary.

Basic Organizational Plans

Dear Sir,

We intend to purchase a new office copier. We would like to consider a BHP copier and wonder if you have a model that would suit our needs.

Our office is small, and a copier would generally be used by only three secretaries. We run approximately 3,000 copies a month and prefer a machine that uses regular paper. We rarely need to run off more than 25 copies at any one time.

We would also like to know about your warranty and repair service. We hope to hear from you soon.

Basic Organizational Plans

Dear Mr. Gul,

In a courier service, I am sending you six copies of our catalog, "Prime Gifts". I am very pleased that you want to circulate it.

The catalog explains everything but I do want to say that for quantities of 20 or more gifts we offer an attractive discount.

Please let me know if I can be of help in other ways.

Yours cordially,

Supplying Detailed Information on a Service

Dear Mr. Hafiz,

I am delighted to know that you are interested in our Executive Book Club and am happy to answer your questions about it.

Between 30 and 40 new books in the field of management are made available each year to the members of the Executive Book club. And, as you have mentioned, the topics treated vary widely. From four to six of these belong to personnel administration; in addition, a similar number of general management books carry some aspects of personnel management.

Although we have several specialized book clubs but there isn't yet one in personnel administration. Considering the increasing demand, it is possible that we will one day establish a club in personnel. Certainly, there is a growing interest in this field.

The Circular enclosed contains complete information about the Executive Book Club. Please note that the average price of books distributed by the club, if purchased separately, is about Rs.300. However, as a member you would pay only about three-fourth of that amount.

I do hope you will want to become a member of the Executive Book Club, Mr. Hafiz. You can do so by filling out the coupon on the back of the circular.

Yours truly,

Writing Goodwill Letters

The goodwill letter you write will probably be successful when you can answer yes to the following questions:

1. If you were the reader, would you honestly like to receive this letter?
A goodwill letter does its job only when it makes the reader feel good.
2. Will the reader feel that you enjoyed writing the letter and that you mean everything you wrote? If the reader feels bored, or indifferent tone, he or she may doubt your sincerity and interest.
3. Did you keep the spotlight on the reader?
To make the reader feel important, put your organization and yourself in the background and convince the reader that you have written the letter just for him or her.
4. Did you omit specific sales material?
The reader will feel let down if your personal good wishes are only a prelude to a sales pitch.

Indirect or Inductive Organizational Plan

	Organizational Plan Bad-News Plan	Persuasive request plan
1	Buffer (using positive, pleasant rather than negative statement.	Attention You oriented theme, reader's benefit.
2	Explanation (reader's benefit, reasons supporting the negative decision)	Interest Explain the opening theme in greater details using psychological appeal.
3	Decision (expressed or implied in clear but tactful manner)	Desire Give relevant evidence to prove your claim
4	Helpful, friendly and positive, stressing on goodwill	Action Close with a clear action ending that suggests a specific action the reader may take.

General Plan (Indirect)1. Buffer:

- i. Agreement
- ii. Appreciation
- iii. Assurance
- iv. Compliment
- v. Cooperation
- vi. Good News
- vii. Neutral Courtesy
- viii. Understanding

Agreement

Find a point on which you and the reader share similar views. For example;

We both know how hard it is to make a profit in this industry.

Appreciation

Express sincere thanks for receiving something. For example;

Your check for Rs.25000/- arrived yesterday. Thank you.

Cooperation

Convey your willingness to help in any way you realistically can. For example;

Employee Service is here to smooth the way for all of you who work to achieve company goals.

Fairness

Assure the reader that you've closely examined and carefully considered the problem, or mention an appropriate action that has already been taken. For example;

For the past week, we have carefully monitored those using the photocopying machine to see whether we can detect any pattern of use that might explain its frequent breakdowns.

Good News

Start with the part of your message that is favourable. For example;

A replacement knob for your range is on its way, shipped February 10 via TCS.

Understanding

Demonstrate that you understand the reader's goals and needs. For example;

So that you can more easily find the printer with the features you need, we are enclosing a brochure that describes all the Panasonic printers currently available.

Here are some other things to avoid the following thing when writing a buffer:

- 1) Avoid saying no. An audience facing the unpleasant news right at the beginning usually reacts negatively to the rest of the message, no matter how reasonable and well phrased it is.
- 2) Avoid using a know-it-all tone. When you use phrases such as "you should be aware that," the audience expects your lecture to lead to a negative response and therefore resists the rest of your message.
- 3) Avoid wordy and irrelevant phrases and sentences. Sentences such as "We have received your letter," "This letter is in reply to your request," and "We are writing in response to your request" are irrelevant. You make better use of the space by referring directly to the subject of the letter.
- 4) Avoid apologizing. An apology weakens your explanation of the unfavourable decision.
- 5) Avoid writing a buffer that is too long. The point is to briefly identify something that both you and your audience are interested in and agree on before proceeding in a businesslike way.

Basic Organizational Plans

Indirect (Inductive) Approach

If you think that your message might upset your reader or listener, you use the indirect plan to ease your audience into the part of your message that shows that you are fair-minded and eager to do business with him on some other terms. This approach consists of four parts:

- (1) A buffer,
- (2) Explanation of your decision supported by reason
- (3) Negative decision tactfully expressed or understood with helpful suggestion;
- (4) A helpful, friendly, and positive close.

Basic Organizational Plans

As good-news plan is similar to direct-request plan, so is persuasive plan to bad-news plan. Persuasion is the attempt to change a reader's attitude, beliefs or action in your favour. This plan is used to influence the readers who may resist otherwise. One way to organize persuasive messages is the AIDA plan, which is of four stages:

1. Attention 2. Interest 3. Desire 4. Action

In the attention stage, you convince the reader that you have something interesting or useful for him. In interest stage you explain how your message is related to your reader. In the desire stage you provide relevant evidence to prove your claim drawing attention to any enclosures. And in the action stage you close the message with an action ending that suggests a specific action the reader may take.

Outline of the Indirect (Inductive) approach

Outline of the indirect (inductive) plan is given below:

Organizational Plan	Bad-News Plan	Persuasive Request Plan
1. Buffer: (using positive, pleasant rather than negative statement.		1. Attention: you oriented theme, reader's benefit.
2. Explanation: (reader's benefit, reasons supporting the negative decision)		2. Interest: Explain the opening theme in greater details using psychological appeal.
3. Decision: (expressed or implied in clear but tactful manner)		3. Desire: Give relevant evidence to prove your claim
4. Helpful, friendly and positive, stressing on goodwill		4. Action: Close with a clear action ending that suggests a specific action the reader may take.

Worksheet

Choosing the Best approach. Each of the following problems states a purpose for writing a letter. LETTER WRITINGGuidelines

1. Use common courtesy in your request – ask rather than demand
2. Include all the information the recipients will need in order to give you maximum help, but don't waste the readers' time with irrelevant details.

Direct Requests

Dear Sir

Send me the latest catalogue of your office supplies

Yours sincerely

Analysis

What do you think of Letter A? Very poor, isn't it? Why?

The letter demands rather than asks (Guideline 1)

The writer has not supplied sufficient information (Guideline 2)

Dear Sir

In consulting our files of catalogs of office equipment and supplies and checking them off against various manufacturers and distributors, I discovered that I do not have your latest catalogs and price lists and other information concerning your products. (I have some materials, of course, but they are out of date.

I have just been promoted to the position of office services manager of Bright Associates, and I think one of the first things I must do is build a good reference source for me and my staff to use in selecting appropriate equipment, materials, and supplies. For this reason I would like to request that you send me your latest catalogs and price lists and other product information you may have in your possession at your earliest convenience. In addition, I would be most grateful if you would put my name on your mailing list so that I will receive all new materials.

Thanking you for your cooperation, I remain,

Yours sincerely

Analysis

Letter B accomplishes certain guidelines well while others not at all.

1. Certainly, B satisfies the first guideline: it is courteous. If you were the recipient, you would quickly be able to sense the writer's sincerity and gratitude.
2. On the other hand, the writer has completely ignored the second guideline – brevity. There is no reason for writers to tell their life's story in a simple request letter. Although the recipients will not be offended, their time will be wasted.
3. This letter is full of deadwood and hackneyed expressions: "For this reason I would like to request" (say "Please"); "I would be most grateful if you would put" (say "I would appreciate you putting"); "Thanking you for your cooperation, I remain" (say "Thank you").

Dear Sir

May I have your latest catalogs and price lists and other information about your office supplies and equipment? I would also like to be placed on your regular mailing list so that I will receive all new sales and promotional literature.

Thank you

Yours sincerely

Analysis

Letter C meets the two guidelines for simple request letters.

1. It is courteous
2. The writer has given all the necessary information without overwriting

1. Inquiries and General Requests

An inquiry asks for information about products or services the writer is interested in purchasing. Where as a general request the writer seeks information without intention to buy or sell. When you write either of these letters use the direct plan and follow these suggestions.

2. Appointments/Recommendations/Requests

While making requests for appointments include five Ws and the H, Day and Date, Time, Place, etc. Moreover, explain the Purpose of the appointment or meeting. Consider the following example:

1. Best news or main idea
2. Explanation
 - i. All necessary details
 - ii. Resale material
 - iii. Educational material
 - iv. Sales promotion
3. Positive, friendly ending
 - i. Appreciation
 - ii. Clear statement of action desired
 - iii. Easy action and motivation to action
 - iv. Willingness to help further
 - v. Dated action if desirables

Guidelines and Alternate Phrases

State the purpose of the appointment you're requesting up front. If you need to “sell” the meeting idea to the other person, be sure to state the purpose in terms of benefits to the other person.

May we talk? I have a couple of ideas that could save us some money—ideas about how you can....

A colleague of mine and yours, Ahmed Hassan, mentioned you and I should get together to discuss our mutual interest in distributing our products in the Multan. I have some information you may find useful, and I'm sure you, too, can share some insights with me about appropriate markets.

I need to talk to you about the production costs for the engine oil. You asked me to keep you informed every step of the way, and I think now is the time to go over several key details.

Suggest a meeting place, date, and time, but show concern for the reader's own schedule by asking for him or her to confirm or to suggest an alternate time, if possible.

- I can be at your office at 11:00 Monday morning if that's convenient for you. If not, call me with another suggestion.
- If this date is not acceptable, let me know when you're free, and I'll arrange my schedule accordingly.

- If this is inconvenient for you, give me a call, and we'll discuss another possibility for a meeting time.
- If you have an alternate suggestion, let me know. I can meet with you almost any time Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Give all the details for the reader to confirm the appointment.

- Would you mind phoning my secretary to confirm?
- If I don't hear from you otherwise, I'll see you in your office on May 15 at 4:00.

Let the reader know if the appointment is mandatory or optional and how to contact you if there's a conflict.

- We do hope you'll be able to join us.
- Mr. Malik Hassan has requested we get together to discuss these issues before the end of the month.

Confirm all other details of the appointment, including any preparation that either of you needs to make for the meeting.

- I've enclosed an agenda. I'd like your comments particularly on the dry clearing project.
- Please bring the annual report with you to the meeting.
- I'm looking forward to your comments about the contract clause in dispute.
- Could you be ready to present your opinion about the new labour policy?
- Please review the enclosed report as a basis of our discussion.
- Would you please calculate your expenses for the past nine months with regard to the Shopping the Mall project? If you can be as exact as possible, we can identify some specific points for further investigation.

Guidelines

Be specific about what type of information you are seeking. Consider your needs before you write. When contemplating the purchase of a product or service, detail precisely the criteria you will consider before making a decision. The more specific you are in your requests, the more knowledgeable you appear.

If your request is an urgent one, indicate that within your correspondence. Provide specific details as to why your request is more important than anyone else's.

When comparison shopping, make sure you ask the same questions of each company. This will allow you to make an informed decision.

Request a written proposal or quotation. In response to your inquiry, a company may take the opportunity to sell you on their product. This is understandable, but your ultimate goal is to gather information, not to be "sold" on the spot.

When asking for a proposal or quotation, include the information necessary for a company to respond appropriately. For example, when inquiring about medical plans, detail the type of coverage in which you are interested.

Adopt a tone appropriate to your correspondence.

Direct Requests

Dear Ahmed:

As we discussed in Islamabad several weeks ago, I would like to stop by your office when I'm in Karachi in June to discuss our magazine's project. I'll be available all day May 6 and the morning of May 7. Would you let me know where and when would be convenient for you? I'll be confirming travel arrangements on Tuesday, so I'd appreciate a call before then.

See you in Karachi,

Dear Naeem:

Could we get together for lunch about 12:30 August 21 at the Pearl across the street from your office? I now have available the latest figures on the project cost and need your comments about.

Please call my office them to confirm you will be able to make lunch that day. If not, would you please give me an alternative date?

Regards,

Dear Mr. Ali,

I would like to demonstrate our new XEL Fax machine to you in your office on Monday, March 21, at 3 p.m.

You will be able to judge the accurate performance of this new model as described on the enclosed brochure.

LETTER WRITING

Persuasive Requests

A request for cooperation, gifts, or favors, without any intention to buy or sell, is a persuasive request. This type of letter attempts to persuade the reader to spend time or money or to go to some trouble to help the writer – usually without benefit to the reader.

1. Begin with something that will Interest the Reader
 - Altruistic Appeal
 - Reader-benefit appeal
 - Individual responsibility appeal
 - Personal experience appeal.
 2. Follow through with the Reason for the Request
 - Emphasize an advantage to someone other than the writer
 - Compliment the Reader
 3. State the Request in Definite and Specific Terms
 4. Stimulate action with closing remarks
 5. Reflect an optimistic Outlook

Dear Residents

The Welfare Society G Block is conducting a survey of our members in an attempt to obtain information which will help in improving the quality of our services and thereby benefiting our worthy members. The information received from you will act as in identifying the problem areas.

In addition, our project Review Committee can benefit from information regarding strength and weaknesses of our programming as well as suggestions for improving them.

Replies to Inquiries

Use the direct plan when you say yes to an inquiry or request, and be sure to follow the suggestions listed here in your reply.

1. Give the Exact Information Requested

- Say in the first sentence that you are granting the request or answering the inquiry. A common error in answering inquiries is failure to answer some of the questions asked. Prevent this common error by marking on the letter of inquiry the points or questions to be addressed. Before you send your reply, double-check with the original letter to see that each point or question has been adequately covered.

- When answering yes to a request for an appointment or reservation, repeat in your letter all the details such as date, time, and place.

The following letter shows an answer to a request for a reservation:

Dear Mr. Ali,

We are happy to receive your registration form and deposit for the 21st Century Marketing Conference to be held April 3-7 in Lahore.

The Lahore Hilton has set aside a block of rooms at a special discounted rate for conference attendees. The rate is Rs. 1000 for a single, Rs. 1500 for a double. To make reservations, call 00 – 11 - 22 before February 1.

Pakistan International Airlines is offering conference attendees up to 40 percent off the regular fares. To make flight reservations, call 800-684-4000, and refer to identification number J0969.

When you arrive at the conference, be sure to register before noon on Monday, April 3, so that you can attend the 1:00 p.m. special roundtable discussion by market analysts.

Yours truly,

2. Express Appreciation for the Inquiry

Tell the customer, either directly or by implication that you are glad he or she has written to you about one of your organization's products or services. Write in the spirit of service and goodwill. The tone of your reply should express your appreciation.

3. Sell Your Organization or Product

Put "sell" into every letter you write. An inquiry tells you that the customer was interested when he or she wrote, but what guarantee do you have that the interest is still "hot"? Stress the benefit of converting interest into action.

4. End with a Positive Closing

If appropriate, offer to give further assistance, and end with a goodwill closing. When inquiries are clear, concise, and specific, they are easy to answer.

Look at the following example. Immediately after the request was received, the following reply was written. Because all the customer's questions could be answered positively, the writer used the direct approach.

Enclosed are samples of the paper we recommend for letterhead stationery. We are happy to answer the questions in your June 15 letter because the content and design of your organization's letterhead create a first and lasting impression of your organization.....

Dear Mr Hassan

Thank you very much for your letter of May 21 in which you request us to send you the latest Catalogue and pricelist of our office supplies and equipment. I send them this morning, by First Courier Service.

The Catalogue gives complete details of our products I am sure you would find them as usual suitable to your requirements.

I am looking forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours sincerely

Replies to Persuasive Requests

It's easy to answer a persuasive request when you can say yes. A smiling "Here it is" or "I'll be glad to" just about sums up the reply. Follow the direct plan and use the suggestions listed here.

1. Start with a Cheerful “Yes”

Open your letter with the good news that will make your reader happy:

“I’ll be at the seminar to help in any way I can. The solution to the problem of tax increases is important to me too, and I’m glad you planned the seminar”.

If the request is granted grudgingly or with reservations, you will probably lose the goodwill you could expect to gain by saying yes.

2. Confirm Details of the Request and Acceptance

The confirmation can be included with the “Yes” in the first paragraph, as in this opening sentence:

We are pleased to enclose the entrance requirements to our graduate business program.

Otherwise, the confirmation should follow in the next paragraph and should repeat the details of the request to be sure that reader and writer agree. For example, a letter accepting an invitation to give a talk at a meeting should confirm the day and date, time, place, subject, and length of the talk. Or, if a contribution is enclosed, the letter should state the amount and purpose.

Offer to do More than Requested

The “something extra” may be an offer to do more than requested.

For example, a professor is invited to speak at a convention in Islamabad, with expenses paid but no fee. The professor not only accepts, but also offers to come at no expense to the nonprofit organization:

Since I will be in Islamabad that week on other business, I shall be happy to speak to the convention on Monday, May 1, or Tuesday, May 2, at no expense to your organization.

Model Letters

Gentlemen,

A few days ago I visited the office of a large corporation in Karachi, and was much impressed with the layouts of their various departments in which modular furniture is displayed. During my visit, I inquired about manufactures of such equipment and was told that you have an entire building in which various modular furniture's and equipments are displayed.

I would like very much to visit your Exhibit Building. I can come any time that is convenient for you. If I do not hear from you to the contrary, I will plan to visit you on Thursday, March 8.

Cordially yours,

Responding to a Request to Visit Showrooms
(In the same situation)

Dear Mr. Abid,

I am delighted to know that you are planning to visit us on Tuesday, March 8. The Exhibit Building is open from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., so you can come anytime.

I thank you for your interest.

Sincerely yours,

Refusal to Inquiries / Requests

When you must say no, use the indirect plan and deliver the bad news gently and tactfully. Strive to convey courtesy and thoughtfulness through your letter. A gracious refusal is much like a persuasive request – you are asking your reader to accept your decision as the only fair answer under the circumstances.

Remember that a “no” letter has two purposes:

1. To say no.
2. To keep the goodwill of the reader.

To accomplish both purposes, consider the suggestions listed below.

Approach the Letter as an Opportunity to “talk it Over”

Give your reader whatever encouragement you can. Don’t say a plain “No.” like, “I must decline this invitation or this order or refuse this request,” you will probably write negatively. But you will probably write constructively if you think. “What can I do to encourage this person even though I have to say no?”

1. Start With a Friendly Buffer Paragraph

When you receive a letter that begins, “It is my unpleasant duty to inform you that...” or “I’m sorry to tell you that we cannot grant your request...” in such situations don’t you immediately close your mind to whatever else the writer may say? You think that the writer is not interested in helping you in building goodwill or in keeping your friendship. The writer seems concerned only with saying no and getting an unpleasant task completed. But suppose the letter begins this way:

Your proposal for a joint meeting of the faculty and Future Business Leaders of Pakistan (FLP) is exciting.

Aren’t you more likely to read the rest of the message with an open mind?

2. Tell the Reader Why You Cannot Say Yes

In your explanation, imply that you would rather say yes than no. And try to compliment the reader in some way.

3. Avoid a Negative Refusal

Give explanation of your refusal in the beginning. A blunt “No” should be avoided. If your letter does good job of explaining, the reader will realize that you cannot do what he or she has asked – the “No” is inferred. If you must state your refusal (to be sure your reader knows you are not granting the request), avoid emphasizing it or putting it in negative terms. Sometimes limiting expressions, such as only or exclusively, may substitute for negatives such as regret, apologies, cannot, and so on. Notice how this actual business letter gives the negative and almost avoids the positive points.

Dear Sir,

We are very sorry that your portrait has been damaged. This rarely happens to Malik photos.

I regret to advise that we cannot hold negatives for a long period of time, because we lack sufficient storage space; therefore, we will not be able to reprint your portrait. I am, however, processing a refund in the amount of Rs. 500/-, which you should receive within the next six weeks.

Please accept our apologies for this problem, as we greatly value your patronage.

With kindest personal regards.

The following letter shows interest in the reader and tries to keep the business while refusing the request.

Dear Mr. Babar,

We were happy to hear that your family was so pleased with your portraits. And we are sorry that one was damaged. Because our storage space is limited; however, all negatives are destroyed ten days after an order has been filled.

A refund in the amount of Rs. 500/- is being processed and you will receive it soon.

Please do let us know if there is anything else we can do for you.

Sincerely,

4. Give Encouragement and, When You Can, Give Help

Sometimes you can take the sting out of a “No” with a helpful suggestion. For example, a department store representative, in declining an order for an article not carried by the store, may tell the customer where he or she can make the purchase. The reservations manager of a hotel, not able to make the reservations requested, suggested:

If you can conveniently defer your arrival in Murree until May 15, we shall be glad to reserve a double room for you and your wife. If you must be here on May 10, you might write for help to the Greater New Hotel Murree at 105 the Mal, Murree.

Model Letters

Gentlemen,

Please send me two copies of your free catalogue, “Prime gifts” which was advertised in the March issue of Ad Vision International. I plan to keep a copy and send the other to my friend.

Thank you!

Yours very truly

(The Situation is same)

Gentlemen,

I am impressed by your advertisement in the March issue of Ad Vision International concerning your free brochure, “Prime Gifts.” This seems like the answer to the most popular question, “What shall we give our outstanding employees when we want to reward them?”

I’d like six copies one for myself and one for each of our general managers in Lahore, Karachi, Peshawar, Quetta and Islamabad.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely yours,

Responding to a Request for a Free Catalog

Dear Mr. Gul,

In a courier service, I am sending you six copies of our catalog, “Prime Gifts”. I am very pleased that you want to circulate it.

The catalog explains everything but I do want to say that for quantities of 20 or more gifts we offer an attractive discount.

Please let me know if I can be of help in other ways.

Yours cordially,

Gentlemen,

May I visit your building in which various office layouts, using modular equipment, are displayed? My schedule is very flexible, and I can come any time that is most convenient for you.

Thank you.

Yours very truly,

Use the Good-News Plan for Recommendations

When facts are mainly favourable or neutral, follow these guidelines:

1. Main Idea

State the applicant's full name and what his or her relationship is to you as employee, customer, friend, etc. Mention dates, length of time, and type of job, credit, to whatever is relevant.

Add an expression of pleasure to your letter.

2. Explanation

Answer all questions, direct or understood.

Support your statements of evaluation (excellent, outstanding, etc.) with specific facts about performance record. For a job applicant:

- a) Tell specific job duties that applicant performed.
- b) Discuss those duties relevant to the position for which the applicant is a candidate, if known.
- c) Mention, when desirable, work habits that show personality characteristics.

If there is negative material, consider the suggestions in the section "Recommendations for Candidates with Shortcomings".

3. Ending

- i. Include, if possible, a friendly statement of your personal opinion about the applicant's probable fitness for the position or for credit, etc.

Be sure to correlate your opinion with documented facts.

Writing Thank You Letters

Just as you can find many occasions for writing personal thank-you messages, you will also find many opportunities for writing thank-you letters to build goodwill of your organization.

Letters of appreciation are often sent to:

- A new customer for a first order.
- An established customer for a particularly large order.
- The payment of an overdue bill.
- The last installment of a special-account purchase.
- An individual or an organization that responds to a special appeal or completes a good job.
- Someone in your own organization who makes a suggestion that proves worthwhile or who does something extra.

Occasionally (it should happen much more often!) such letters are also sent to:

- Customers who order regularly and pay their bills on time.
- Employees who continually do their work well.
- Individuals and organizations who cooperate on everyday jobs but get little attention.
- Other opportunities for sending thank-you messages include special occasions, special services, and extra responsibilities.
- Consider the following example; it is a thank – you letter to a guest speaker.

Dear Raheel,

Thank you for the time and effort you put into your presentation for the Association of Chartered Accountants meeting yesterday. I felt your talk was very well received by the members of the association.

I appreciate your willingness to make this public appearance as a representative of Community College. You handled the topic very well, and your professional approach was exemplary.

Sincerely,

A thank-you letter to the old customers

Dear Customers,

As the new year begins, Rehman stores thanks you for your friendship and for the business you have given us during the past year.

The expansion of our store will be completed in a few weeks. We can then offer you the variety of household items in the city.

During the coming year we will do our best to serve you in every way.
We hope that the New Year will be a happy and successful year for you.

Cordially,
Rehman Ali

Writing Letters of Congratulation

A message of congratulation or commendation is much like a message of appreciation:

- Each recognizes and expresses interest in a worthwhile achievement.
- A letter of appreciation says ‘thank you’ and implies “well done.”
- When your friends celebrate special events or receive honours, you want to congratulate them. In the same way, business people use congratulatory letters on such occasions as anniversaries, graduations, births, marriages, new businesses or homes, promotions, elections, retirements, and various awards and rewards. These letters convey a pleasant message and keep a favourable image of you and your organization in the recipient’s mind.
- For instance, this brief congratulatory note was sent to an executive who recently became president of the company:

Dear Shahid,

Congratulations on your recent promotion to president of Community Bank. It is well deserved.
I am sure that the business will grow and prosper under your capable leadership.

Yours sincerely,

See this example of a congratulatory note:

Dear Mrs. Rafi,

Congratulations on being named to the Governor’s task Force to Study Equal Opportunities in Business, Industry, and Government. I was very pleased to read that you have been chosen as one of the ten executives for this task force.

If anyone at Ahmed Textile can help you and the other members of the task force, please let me know. We will be delighted to be of service.

Sincerely,

Writing Letters that Announce, Invite, or Welcome

Announcements and Invitations

Goodwill announcements and invitations include:

- Announcements of a new business, a new location, or an expansion or reorganization of facilities.

These usually include an invitation to visit.

- Announcements of the appointment of a new official or a new representative of the organization.

Announcements of a new service or policy, often inviting the reader to use it, for instance, when a store announces that it will be open an extra evening each week.

A bank announces a new direct deposit plan in this example:

Welcome Letters

Welcoming letters are written for many occasions. These messages may be morale builders. Usually they have a definite sales flavour, as:

- New members of a club.
- New customers.
- New subscribers.
- New charge account customers.
- New dealers.

These messages discuss organization services and products and invite readers to call or visit, but they avoid specific sales promotion.

Notice the friendly tone and service attitude of this letter from a bank president to new customer:

Writing Get-Well Wishes and Sympathy Letters

When a personal friend or a business acquaintance is ill, a letter from you is welcome. If the illness is not serious and recovery is expected, you can send a humorous get-well card or a cheerful, happy letter. If the illness is serious or the person is getting over a major operation, then send a more subdued letter. That person will not be in a mood for jokes!

Be optimistic when you write to someone who is ill. Mention once at the beginning of the letter how sorry you are that the person is ill. From then on talk about a return to normal life, as the writer of the following letter did:

Dear Mr. Naeem,

I am sorry to hear that you're in the hospital and hope that with rest and care you'll be up and about again soon.

Meanwhile, if there's anything I can do for you, just give me a call. I wish you a speedy recovery and quick return to the office.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Ali:

The management of PDS School is interested in leasing 2 economy vans to provide transportation facility to their students within the Lahore City area to their students. We were referred to your company by Bright Associates and would like to inquire about the terms of your leasing contracts as well as monthly leasing rates.

Please send detailed information concerning mileage limits, maintenance requirements, and corporate discounts to the mailing address above. If possible, we would prefer to receive the above information electronically at our e-mail address listed above, as this would speed up our information-collecting and decision-making process.

We hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Ahmed:

We are in the process of setting up a new office in Lahore and would like to compare prices from the local office furniture companies.

We will need 12 desks and 24 chairs, six metal filing cabinets, a 4.5' x 6' dry erase board, and a conference table that seats ten. The conference table and ten of the chairs should be high quality wood. As the office is opening on September 6, we would need the furniture delivered by the 2nd. We are looking to spend no more than Rs. 100,000.00.

If you would like to offer a quote or discuss our needs in more detail, please call me. We hope to have all our quotes by next Monday.

LETTER WRITING

Placing Orders

An order letter is a contract of selling and purchasing or services. Orders are considered one of the simplest types of direct request. While placing an order, you need not excite your reader's interest; just state your needs clearly and directly.

Many companies use special forms for ordering merchandise or service. They may use their own, called a purchase order, or one provided by the seller, called an order form. These forms have blank spaces to ensure the inclusion of all necessary information. Their advantage is that they enable a company to number and so carefully file all expenditures.

Nevertheless, there will be times when an order must be put into letter format. At such times, you must be sure to include COMPLETE, ACCURATE INFORMATION because incomplete orders result in delayed deliveries, and inaccurate facts result in receipt of the wrong merchandise.

Here are some suggestions for writing effective order letters.

1. Give the Information in a Clear Format

To make your letter easy to read, do one of the following:

- Write a separate, single-spaced paragraph for each item, with double spacing between paragraphs.
- Arrange your order in a tabular form similar to an order blank.

When several sets of numbers, items, and prices are given, tabular form is clearer than writing the information in sentences.

2. Write Orders, not Just Hints

Legally, an order letter is the “offer” portion of a contract. The “acceptance” portion of the contract is completed when the seller sends the merchandise. Use specific and direct openings such as “please send me” Or “Please ship...” rather than vague phrases such as “I’m interested in” Or “I’d like to....”

3. Give a Complete Description of Each Item

Include the following information in your order letter:

- i. Quantity ordered.
- ii. Catalog (or model or stock) number
- iii. Name of product
- iv. Description of product, including as much of the following as is appropriate (1) colour (2) size (3) material, (4) grade or quality, (5) pattern, (6) finish, and (7) any other details available.
- v. Unit price
- vi. Total price for desired quantity
- vii. Any other information that you have, including where you saw the product advertised.

4. Tell How You Will Pay for the Order

Give the mod of payment to be used (personal cheque, COD, money order, or credit card). Be sure to add any shipping charges and sales tax that may be part of the total cost. If you want the item charged to a credit card, give the credit card number and the expiry date. Also, if the printed name on the credit card differs from the signature and typed name on the letter, be sure to give the exact name of the cardholder.

5. Tell Where, When, & How you Want the Merchandise Shipped

Give the shipping address, or say that you want the merchandise sent to the address above (your return address) or below (if your address is typed below your typed signature).

If you need the order by a certain date, be sure to include that date in your order letter. And if you have a preference, include the method of shipment. Otherwise, the seller will choose the shipping method and will send the merchandise when it is convenient. For example, you may need the merchandise in a hurry and be willing to pay the extra cost of air express.

Merchandise is shipped FOB destination or FOB shipping point. The initials FOB stand for “free on board.” If merchandise is shipped FOB shipping point, the buyer pays shipping charges over and above the cost of the merchandise. If merchandise is shipped FOB destination, the seller pays the shipping charges and they are included in the price of the merchandise.

The Following letter would run into trouble:

Dear Sirs,

Please send me one of your weather vanes which I saw advertised for Rs. 1000. We have recently repainted our garage, and a weather vane would be a wonderful finishing touch.

My cheque is enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Sirs,

Please send me one of your weather vanes which I saw advertised for Rs. 1000. We have recently repainted our garage, and a weather vane would be a wonderful finishing touch.

My cheque is enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

Organization Plan for Orders

A. Direct Statement of the Request

- Use wording that indicates an order rather than a request: “Please send me” or “please ship” instead of “I want” or “I need,” which are neither polite nor legally appropriate for a business order.
- Open with a general description of your order that encompasses all the details.

B. Justification, Explanation, and Details

- For complex orders, provide a general explanation of how the requested materials will be used.
- Provide all specifications: quantity, price (including discounts), size, catalog number, product description, shipping instructions (date and place), arrangements for payment (method, time, deposits), and cost totals.
- Use a format that presents information clearly and makes it easy to total amounts.
- Double-check the completeness of your order and the cost totals.

C. Courteous Close with Request for Specific Action

- Include a clear summary of the desired action.
- Whenever possible, suggest a future reader benefit of complying with the order.
- Close on a cordial note.
- Clearly state any time limits that apply to your order, and explain why they are important.

Look at another Example:Dear Sir,

Thank you for your letter of March 23 along with the catalog for computer hardware. Please send us the following goods by TCS Land Cargo Service.

- i. Hard Disk (60 GB) 6 Nos
- ii. Ram (256 MB) 6 Nos

The consignment may please be packed in strong cases. The book receipt may be sent with other document through our bank from which you will receive the payment in cash. Please make sure to send the consignment before April 3.

Yours truly,

Acknowledging an Order

Acknowledging an order is a profitable practice. An order acknowledgment does several important functions. A letter acknowledging an order provides an excellent opportunity to resell your product and your organization. Some organizations think such replies unnecessary. However, orders may not be routine for the buyer. The acknowledgment completes a valid contract between buyer and seller.

An acknowledgment should always be sent promptly. An acknowledgement is usually sent as a form reply in the form of.

- i. A postal card.
- ii. An acknowledgment form,
- iii. A duplicate invoice
- iv. An individual letter.

In several situations an acknowledgment letter becomes a must. These situations are listed here.

While answering use the following plan.

- i. Thank/appreciate the customer.
- ii. Restate the order to illuminate any likely misunderstanding.
- iii. Tell the customer that his order is being processed and should reach you within the given time frame.
- iv. Express your pleasure in serving him

1. A Customer's First Order

Never miss the opportunity to make your first impression on a customer a positive one. You want to welcome the customer and encourage him or her to buy from you again.

Dear Mr. Naveed,

We are pleased to have received your order of September 15 and would like to welcome you as our new customer.

Your order (No. 62997) for one dozen spark plugs is being processed and will be ready for shipment on September 21, it will be delivered to your workshop by our own van, and payment will be c.o.d. (our policy for all orders under Rs. 1000).

We are sure you will appreciate this item of our auto line. Mr. Gul, your sales representative, will call on you soon with a catalog and samples.

Cordially,

2. An Incomplete or Unclear Order

When information is missing in an order, it is important not to throw the mistakes of the writers (your customers) in their faces. Don't tell your customers they forgot – just ask for the information you need to fill the order and encourage a quick response by enclosing a reply envelope.

Dear Mr. Ali,

Thank you for your order of October 22 for 6 shirts of black Bonanza Youth. We are eager to deliver order 129 to your store as soon as possible.

But first, please let us know which collar size you'd like. These are made both in free size and different sizes small, medium, large. If you note your preference on the bottom of this letter and mail it back to us today, we can have your order ready by the beginning of next week. We're sure you'd like to receive your purchase without further delay.

Sincerely Yours,

Acknowledging a Large Order

Situation

The Sales Manager Ravi Publishing Company Mr. Waseem has just received a big order from Mr. Kamran for accounting textbooks. Waseem writes to acknowledge the order.

Dear Mr. Kamran

Thank you for your large order for Ideal Accounting 10/12. The Ideal accounting is very popular.

I think you will find Ideal's materials very easy to teach from, and I hope that you will receive outstanding results, better than any of those of its competitors.

We are now in the process of developing a film for the Ideal programme, and I'll see that you get advance information on it. I'm sending you an advance copy of an article which will appear in the October Issue of Business Teacher, "Bookkeeping and Accounting Are Not the Same." I hope you enjoy it.

Please let me know if anything else is required. Thank you again for your confidence.

Cordially yours,

3. Orders for Discontinued Items

Here is a real opportunity for some selling by suggesting an alternate product. When you do not have the exact item a customer has ordered, you may send a form message to the customer with a clipping about the substitute item.

The following acknowledgment shows how an order for a discontinued item can be handled by suggesting an alternate item.

Dear Mr. Arif,

Thank you for your order for one pair of Eagle shoes, size 10D.

The Eagle shoe is well made and has been the best-selling shoe in Pakistan for many years. It is made by craftspeople who take pride in their work. Only the finest materials are used in manufacturing Eagle shoes.

Eagle shoes are sold nationwide through a network of distributors. These outlets carry a complete inventory of the styles and colors available.

Because we want you to be perfectly happy with your new Eagles, we are returning your money order for Rs. 1000 and requesting that you contact Mr. Arshad Ali at:

Moti Bazar
Karachi

Mr. Arshad is one of our leading dealers, and he will see that your shoes are perfectly fitted for comfort.

We are sending you a flier showing our latest styles,
Remember, Mr. Arif, Eagles are known as “The Shoe That Pakistan Walks In.”

Yours sincerely,

4. Orders Requiring a Delay in Shipment

Occasionally an item will be out of stock and shipment will be delayed. You can help keep the customer’s goodwill by telling when shipment can be expected.

Delayed Delivery

Sometimes a delayed delivery is caused by the seller, not the buyer -- a delicate situation that requires a carefully written letter. When an order cannot be filled promptly, the customer is entitled to an explanation. Assurance should be given that the delay is unavoidable and that everything is being done to speed delivery.

Consider the following:

Dear Sir,

Requests for our book, “Punjab, English, Grammar & Composition,” have been overwhelming. As a result, we are temporarily out of copies.

Nevertheless, the new printing is presently being prepared, and I have added your name to the mailing list to receive a copy as soon as it is available.

In the meantime, you may find a book by Professor Shibly to be of some help. The book entitled “Common Errors in English” published by us.

Yours faithfully,

Partial Delivery

When a partial shipment can be made, the customer must be informed that certain items have been back ordered. Again, the letter should assume the customer’s willingness to wait. But it should also make an attempt to “resell” the merchandise by stressing its finer features without emphasizing the missing items. Consider the following example:

Dear Mr. Ali,

Thank you for your recent order, number 622. We are always especially delighted to serve an old friend.

Your six pairs of Chinese earrings (Item 15b) and one dozen Primrose necklace (item 8a) have been shipped by TCS and should arrive at your boutique within the week.

Unfortunately, our stock of Chinese bangle bracelets (item 9d) has been depleted because of a delay in shipments from China. Our craftsmen have been at great pains to keep up with the demand for these intricate and finely wrought bracelets. We have put your one dozen bracelets on back order and hope to have them on their way to you before the end of the month.

Very truly yours,

6. Orders for Products Sold Only Through Dealers

Although it may be your policy to sell your products only through dealers, it is never a good idea to use the phrase “it is our policy” -- a customer’s reaction may be that you should change your policy. Just explain what your policy is. If you must get this idea across, say “it is our practice” instead. That phrase isn’t quite as strong.

7. Orders From Customers With Poor Credit

Sometimes an order must be refused because of the unsatisfactory condition of the account of a customer buying on credit. In these cases, try to find an alternative payment method that would allow you to complete the order. You might offer to send the order COD or ask the customer to send 50 percent of the payment before you ship the merchandise.

Asking For Substitute Delivery

Dear Mr. Ahmed

Thank you so much for ordering Parveen Shakir’s outstanding collection. As you know, in the five years since its first publication, it has become a great appeal everywhere.

Sadly, ‘Khushboo’ is no longer in print, and I am returning your cheque for Rs. 200. But to satisfy your interest in poetry, I would like to suggest ‘Sadbarg’ another fine book of the poetess, an alternative.

If you would like a copy of ‘sadbarg’ which costs only Rs. 200, please let me know, and I will immediately send it to you.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sir,

We have something similar to what you are looking for -- a picture and a description of it are enclosed.

Also enclosed are an order form and a return envelope that will make it easy for you to let us know your decision.

Our money-back guarantee insures your satisfaction.

Yours truly,

Refusing an Order

Some orders must be refused. It may be the policy of your organization to sell only through dealers. Or the customer’s account may be in unsatisfactory condition for you to ship the merchandise on credit.

Letters refusing orders call for the indirect plan, or the “sandwich approach,” with the bad news in the middle. Use the following outline for these letters.

1. Start with a “Buffer”

Thank the customer for the order, and repeat the details.

2. Give an Explanation

In a positive way, tell why you cannot complete the order and stress what you can do, along with the advantages to the reader. Offer to help the reader in any way you can -- give the name of the nearest dealer, explain credit terms, or offer an alternate solution.

3. Say No

Many times your explanation will imply the “No” that is coming. Be sure the refusal is clear.

4. End With a “Buffer”

Resell your organization and your products.

In the following example see how the writer suggests a substitute in place of an ordered, discontinued item.

Gentlemen,

Many thanks for your order of April 12 for Seabreeze window air conditioner. You can be sure that your decision to buy a Seabreeze was a decision to buy the best in the market.

Your order cannot be filled as the line has been discontinued. However, we offer you, latest range of split air conditioner. This latest model has several improvements and new features. We now stock the new split air conditioners. This model has these improved features.

Delayed Shipment

Situation

The manufacturer of institutional uniforms and supplies received an order on July 14 from General Hospital for 20 uniforms. Fifteen days late, the hospital writes that the uniforms did not arrive. The uniforms were sent to another hospital in Lahore City. In the response, the manufacturer tries to set things right and retain the hospital's goodwill.

Dear Mr. Bari,

The 20 uniforms you ordered on July 14 are being sent to you today and should be at your place by Friday of this week.

When I investigated the original shipment, I was astounded to learn that your uniforms were sent to another hospital. It's hard to account for such an error, and the only excuse I can offer is that we've had several part-time warehouse people this month to fill in for some of the regular crew who are on vacation.

I hope that this special shipment will compensate in part for the trouble I know we have caused you. Please do let us know if we can do anything more for you.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Unexpectedly Out of Stock

Situation

Mr. Rasheed, a sales representative for Five Star Publishers, has just visited a Bookstore in Multan (Mr. Sultan owner) and promised Mr. Sultan that he would receive 16 copies of Business English. Upon arriving at company headquarters, Rasheed learned that there are no copies left due to the unexpected purchase of the entire inventory by a foreign publisher. The Vice President of Five Star Publishers writes to Mr. Sultan to apologize for Rasheed's unfulfilled promise.

Dear Mr. Sultan,

When you placed an order with Mr. Rasheed last week for 16 copies of the Business English, he promised immediate shipment.

I would have made that promise, too Mr. Sultan, because our inventory of this handbook seemed adequate for at least six months. However, neither of us was prepared for the news that, just three days ago, a European distributor cleaned us out of stock.

Of course, we immediately put in a large order for the handbook, and have been promised 2000 copies by October 22. The same day we get our copies we will send yours to you, and if everything goes right you should have your copies by October 24.

We're feeling very good about our professional handbook series. I'm mailing you today a booklet describing the books in this series. In the meantime, Mr. Rasheed joins me in wishing you a smashing fall season at your Bookstore.

Error in an Invoice

Situation

Galaxy, Inc. is a manufacturer of Plymouth electric stoves. The sales representative for Galaxy calls upon a retailer, Mr. Malik and sells him six Plymouth DeLuxe stoves. There is a sale on these stoves at the price of Rs.177.75 compared with Rs.215.35, which is the regular price. However, when the invoice arrived, the amount was Rs.1292.10-a difference of Rs.225.60 more than the anticipated amount. Malik writes the manufacturer about the mistake.

Gentlemen,

When your representative, Mr. Arif, called on me in late April, he told me that you were offering a special price of Rs.177.75 on the Plymouth DeLuxe stove. I ordered six. However, the invoice I received showed the amount due as Rs.1292.10 -- a difference of Rs.225.60.

I'm enclosing a cheque for Rs.1066.50. Unless I hear from you to the contrary; I will assume that this is the correct amount. If this is not the case, I would like to cancel three of the stoves.

Very truly yours,

Response Regarding Error in an Invoice

(In the same situation)

Dear Mr. Jaffar,

I'm sorry about the mistake we made in our January 17 invoice. You are right, and the fault is mine. I have entered the amount on your ledger sheet as Rs.1066.50 (thank goodness, the Rs.1292.10 had not been posted).

I can't really account for this mistake, Mr. Jaffer and I am delighted that you caught it. Thank you for writing.

Cordially yours,

Acknowledging a First Order

Mr. Adil, Sales Promotion Manager for Royal Furniture has just learned that Raheel Arif, owner of National Interiors, has placed a big order. This is Royal's first order from National Interiors, and Adil decides to write Raheel a special welcome letter.

Dear Mr. Raheel,

Thank you for your order for furniture and the cheque that accompanied it. The furniture is being shipped today-by special instructions from me.

Our sales representative will call on you within the next couple of weeks to thank you in person. I think you'll like Noman. He is extremely knowledgeable about our line of furniture, and he will be anxious to learn how he can be of help to you.

In a separate mailing, I'm sending you our just released pamphlet on our new line of patio furniture, "Outside Living at its Very Best."

LETTER WRITING

Claim and Adjustment Requests

Ideally, everything runs smoothly in the operation of an organization -- no mistake, no problems, no defects, and no misunderstandings. However, even in the best-managed organizations, dissatisfactions are bound to occur. In recent years both buyers and sellers are more aware of problems caused by business errors. When a product or service does not meet customers' expectations, the customers are disappointed and usually complain.

Their complaints should not be called complaint letters, because complaint connotes irritation, unpleasantness, negativism, and even anger. Using a word with such negative connotations could lead to a bad attitude toward customers. Letters about such complaints should be called claim letters.

Countless aspects of business dealings can break down, but the most common causes for claims are:

1. an incorrect bill, invoice, or statement
2. a bill for merchandise ordered but never received;
3. delivery of unordered merchandise;
4. delivery of incorrect merchandise;
5. delivery of damaged or defective merchandise

Two other more specialized types of claims are:

1. a request for an adjustment under a guarantee or warranty;
2. a request for restitution under an insurance policy.

A claim is written to inform the company of the problem and suggest a fair compensation. No matter how annoying the nature of the problem, how great the inconvenience, the purpose of a claim is NOT to express anger, but to get results.

Therefore, it is important to avoid a hostile or demanding tone. A claim must be calm and polite though, of course, also firm.

A claim should begin with the facts, first explaining the problem such as the condition of the merchandise or the specific error made. Then all the necessary details should be described in a logical order. These details may include the order and delivery dates, the order or invoice number, the account number, the method of shipment, etc. A copy of proof of purchase, such as a sales slip or an invoice, should be included whenever possible. (Always, of course, keep the original.)

In most cases, and especially in your first letter, assume that a fair adjustment will be made, and follow the plan for direct requests. Begin with a straightforward statement of the problem, and give a complete, specific explanation of the details.

Politely request specific action in your closing, and suggest that the business relationship will continue if the problem is solved satisfactorily.

The following direct organizational plan is used for writing claims.

A. Direct statement of the Request

1. Write a claim letter as soon as possible after the problem has been identified.
2. State the need for replacement, refund or correction of the problem.
3. Maintain a confident, factual, fair, unemotional tone.

B. Justification, Explanation, and Details

To gain the reader's understanding praise some aspect of the good or service or at least explain why the product was originally purchased.

1. Present facts honestly, clearly, and politely.
2. Eliminate threats, sarcasm, exaggeration, and hostility.
3. Specify the problem: product failed to live up to advertised standards; product failed to live up to sales representative's claims; product fell short of company's policy; product was defective; customer service was not up to the mark.
4. Make no accusation against any person or company, unless you can back it up with facts.
5. Use a non-argumentative tone to show your confidence in the reader's fairness.
6. If necessary, refer to documentation (invoices, cancelled cheque, confirmation letters, etc., but mail only photocopies.
7. Ask the reader to propose fair adjustment, if appropriate.
8. If appropriate, clearly state what you expect as a fair settlement, such as credit against the next order you place, full or partial refund of the purchase price of the product, replacement or repair of the defective merchandise, or performance of services as originally contracted.
9. Do not return the defective merchandise until you have been asked to do so.
10. Avoid uncertainty or vagueness that might permit the adjusters to prolong the issue by additional correspondence or to propose a less-than-fair settlement.

C. Courteous Close with Request for Specific Action

Summarize desired action briefly.

- Simplify compliance with your request by including your name, address, phone number and hours of availability.
- Note how complying with your request will benefit the reader.
- Consider another example that how the writer conveys his message of inconvenience in calm manner.

Dear Sirs,

On March 1, we ordered and subsequently received one case of handsaws, model 88b. We paid for the order with our cheque no. 7293, a photocopy of which is enclosed.

When we decided to order these saws instead of model 78b, it was at the urging of your sales representative, Mr. Ali Naeem. He assured us that the new saws were more durable and efficient than the older model.

However, we have now had the saws on our selling floor for three weeks, and already six have been returned with broken teeth by extremely dissatisfied customers.

We are therefore returning the entire order of 88b saws and would like to be refunded for their full purchase price plus shipping expenses.

Yours truly,

Here is a well-written letter requesting an adjustment. Notice that this writer reverses the order of the three steps, but the letter gets the job done just as well.

Gentlemen,

Please repair or replace my calculator watch, Model C863, and send it to me at the address above.

After six months of use, the musical alarm has quit working.

Enclosed is my watch, a copy of the sales receipt showing the date of purchase, and your warranty, which guarantees material and workmanship for one year.

Yours Sincerely,

Granting Requests for Adjustment

An adjustment letter is the reply to a complaint (called a claim letter). In general, the best attitude is to give the customer the benefit of the doubt. Most persons are honest in their claims, and it is usually better to make the desired adjustment than to risk losing a customer.

Even though your firm's adjustment policy may be generous, the ultimate success of your good-news adjustment letters depends not only on what you say but also on how you say it. Always Choose neutral or positive language in referring to a complaint.

Whether or not your company is at fault, even the most annoying or demanding claim should be answer politely. An adjustment letter should NOT be negative or suspicious; it must NEVER accuse the customer or grant any adjustment grudgingly. Remember, your company's image and goodwill are at stake when you respond even to unjustified claims.

There Can be Three types of adjustment letters.

1. When the seller is at fault
2. When the buyer is at fault.
3. When the third party is at fault.

The following organizational plan is suggested for answering claim letters.

A. Initial Statement of the Good News or Main Idea

1. State immediately your willingness to honour the reader's claim.
2. Accept your reader's account as entirely accurate unless good business reasons demand a different interpretation of some points.
3. Adopt a tone of consideration and courtesy; avoid being defensive.
4. Thank the reader for taking the time to write.

B. Middle, Informational Section

1. Minimize or, if possible, omit any disagreements with your reader's interpretation of events.
2. Maintain a supportive tone through such phrases as "Thank you for," "May we ask," "Please let us know," and "We are glad to work with you."
3. Apologize only under extreme circumstances; then do so crisply and without an overly apologetic tone.
 - Admit your firm's faults carefully.
 - Avoid blaming any particular person or office.
 - Avoid implying general company inefficiency.
 - Avoid making unrealistic promises about the future.
 - Remind the reader of your firm's quality controls.

C. Warm, Courteous Close

1. Clarify any necessary actions that your reader must take.
2. Remind the reader of how you have honored the claim.
3. Avoid negative information.
4. Encourage the customer to look favorably on your company and/or the product in question (resale information).
5. Encourage the customer to continue buying other goods from you (sales promotion), but avoid seeming greedy.

Writing Letters Granting Adjustments

When granting a request for an adjustment, follow these four steps:

1. Tell the Reader That Full Adjustment Is Gladly Granted

Give the good news in the first sentence. Don't let the reader feel you are doing him or her favour, even if you feel that you are making a special concession. Instead, convince the reader that goodwill and friendship are more important to you than the money involved and that your organization always wants to take good care of its customers.

2. Express Sincere Appreciation for the Reader's Adjustment Request

Acknowledge your reader's inconvenience in writing the letter and waiting for the adjustment. Emphasize that you welcome this opportunity to set things right. Let the customer know how his or her letter has helped the organization to improve its products or service.

3. Stress Your Organization's Effort to Prevent Further Customer Dissatisfaction

Accept the blame and apologize if your organization is at fault. If appropriate, explain what caused the problem, but don't blame the computer. Most people know that computers don't make errors only the operators do. Don't make the mistake of telling your reader "This will never happen again." No one can promise that. If appropriate, explain what your organization is doing to prevent a repetition of the problem.

4. End the Letter Positively

Don't end with a negative phrase, such as "We hope you do not have any more trouble with your washing machine." The best ending for a letter granting an adjustment makes no reference to the original problem. End on a note that implies future dealings, and don't overlook the possibility of doing some effective sales promotion for related products or at least some reselling of your organization.

Consider the following example:

Dear Mr. Ali,

Your new lawn umbrella is being shipped prepaid today. It should arrive in a few days.

Thank you for returning the torn one. Because a mended umbrella might not be water-resistant, we are sending you a new one, so that you can keep your new lawn table protected. You will notice that the new umbrella is made of vinyl-coated nylon, which has proved superior to the polyester and cotton one you bought last year.

When you need lawn furniture and accessories, you will find everything from small tables to foundations in our latest catalog. You can rely on our guarantee of high quality and "satisfaction or your money back."

Yours sincerely,

Note the organization of the letter to Mr. Ali. First comes the news he wants to hear that a new lawn umbrella is on its way. Next comes the writer's appreciation for the customer's calling attention to the defect. Then the writer explains the change in materials, an explanation owed to the reader, and one that in this case can make the organization look progressive and concerned. The final appeal for another sale is appropriate because the adjustment has been granted and the reader will be satisfied.

LETTER WRITING

Writing Letters Refusing Adjustments

When The Buyer Is At Fault

1. Support the Reader's Point of View in Your Buffer Paragraph

Since the customer probably thinks he or she is right, try to make him or her accept the logical solution. Be sure the customer realizes that you understand the problem and that you will be fair.

2. Assure the Customer That the Request Is Appreciated and Has Received Individual Consideration.

The requested adjustment is important to the reader in your letter, show that the reader's point of view is also important to your organization.

3. Present the Explanation before the Decision

Stress what can be done and emphasize your purpose to be fair to all customers. Don't blame and don't argue. Avoid unfriendly, negative expressions, such as your complaint, your error, you misinterpreted, you neglected, your claim, you are mistaken, our records show, and your ignorance. With a truthful and tactful presentation, lead the customer to accept your solution as the only reasonable one.

4. Be Courteous Even When Answering an Angry or a Distorted Claim

If you answer sarcastically, you may lose both your self-respect and your customer. Completely ignore any insults in the letter you have received; concentrate on writing an answer that is friendly, rational, and professional. Usually it costs less to keep the customer you have than to find a new one.

5. Try to Leave the Reader in a Pleasant Frame of Mind

A friendly but concise closing is even more important when the adjustment is not granted.

Use the effective buffer paragraph technique when writing bad-news letters:

- Step 1: Buffer
- Step 2: Explanation
- Step 3: Your no (stated or implied)
- Step 4: a friendly close.

You may review the summary of the indirect approach to help you write effective bad-news messages.

The writer of the following letter realizes that Mr. Hassan must be convinced of the organization's position and be kept as a customer (after all, he did buy an expensive item). Here's the answer to a request for repair or replacement for his automatic garage door opener.

Dear Mr. Hassan,

You are right to expect high-quality merchandise from The Automatic Door Company, We try to give you the best for your money and to stand behind our products when they fail as a result of defects in material and workmanship, as our warranty states.

We appreciate your sending the door opener to us for analysis. It appears that the opener has gotten wet. Excess moisture over a period of time causes this defect.

Our service manager estimates that cleaning and repairing your door opener would cost Rs. 2500.

Since your door opener is several years old, you may want to consider buying a new one. We have made many improvements to our door openers since yours was manufactured, including a sealed circuit board that would prevent the possibility of damage from moisture. A new door opener, which costs Rs. 3500.00 postpaid, should give you even longer service than your old one did.

Please let us know whether you want us to repair or replace your opener.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Shibly,

We are sorry that you are not completely satisfied with your Atlas Vacuum Cleaner. You are entirely justified in expecting more than four years of reliable use from an Atlas Appliance, and we are always eager to service any product that does not for some reason live up to standard.

We appreciate your giving us the opportunity to examine the damaged vacuum cleaner. According to our service department, the filter had never been replaced although the owner's manual advises replacement every few months. As a result, the motor itself gradually became clogged with dust and dirt.

The cost of repairing and cleaning the vacuum is estimated as Rs. 500. If you would like to have it repaired, please let us know. With regular cleaning and replacement of the filter and exhaust bag, you should receive several more years of service from your Atlas appliance.

Yours truly,

When the third Party is at Fault

You have three options:

- (1) honor the customer's claim with the standard good-news letter and no additional explanation;
- (2) honour the claim but explain that you were not really at fault; or
- (3) take no action on the claim and suggest that your customer file against the firm that caused the defect or damage. Common business sense tells you, however, that the third option is almost always a bad choice. (The exception is when you're trying to dissociate yourself from any legal responsibility for the damaged merchandise, especially if it has caused a personal injury, in which case you would send a bad-news message.)

This letter will be written when neither the company nor the customer is entirely at fault. It must express an attitude of pleasant cooperation. It should be based on facts and offer a reason for refusing the requested adjustment. It should immediately make a counteroffer that meets the customer halfway. Of course, it should leave the decision to accept the adjustment to the customer and suggest a course of action.

You have three options: (1) honor the customer's claim with the standard good-news letter and no additional explanation; (2) honour the claim but explain that you were not really at fault; or (3) take no action on the claim and suggest that your customer file against the firm that caused the defect or damage. Common business sense tells you, however, that the third option is almost always a bad choice. (The exception is when you're trying to dissociate yourself from any legal responsibility for the damaged merchandise, especially if it has caused a personal injury, in which case you would send a bad-news message.)

Of the other two options, the first is more attractive. By honouring the claim without explanation, you are maintaining your reputation for fair dealing at no cost to yourself; the carrier or manufacturer that caused the damage in the first place will refund you. Remember that businessman wants to correct problems to keep the customer's goodwill. Follow these steps when writing a letter compromising on an adjustment:

Step 1: Buffer

Step 2: Explanation

Step 3: No (stated or implied)

Step 4: Counterproposal or compromise

Step 5: Friendly close.

1. Lack of established credit.

2. Overextension of credit, which may result in an inability to pay bills on time.
3. Unwillingness to pay that which is owed according to credit reporting agencies.

LETTER WRITING

Collection Letters

No matter how carefully a company chooses its credit customers, there will be times when a bill goes unpaid and steps to collect must be taken. The problem when writing a collection letter is how to get payment and at the same time keep a customer. The writer of a collection letter wants to get the money owed and maintain goodwill.

Collection letters, therefore, should be persuasive rather than forceful, firm rather than demanding. A fair and tactful letter gets better results than a sarcastic or abusive one. In fact, collection letters should be “you-oriented”; courteous, considerate, and concerned about the customer’s best interest.

The purpose of collection letters is:

1. To get the money.
2. To keep the customer and future business.
3. To build goodwill.
2. The purpose of the collection process is to maintain Goodwill while collecting what is owed
3. Collection is a sensitive issue
4. The following practices may be avoided
 1. Falsely implying that a lawsuit has been filed
 2. Contact the debtor’s employer or relatives about the debt
 3. Communication to the other persons that the person is in debt.
 4. Harassing the debtor
 5. Using abusive or obscene language
 6. Using defamatory language
 7. Intentionally causing mental stress
 8. Threatening violence
 9. Communicating by postcard (not confidential enough)
 10. Misrepresenting the legal status of the debt
 11. Communicating in such a way as to make the receiver physically ill
 12. Misrepresenting the message as a government or court document
 13. Communicating by postcard (not confidential enough)
 14. Misrepresenting the legal status of the debt
 15. Communicating in such a way as to make the receiver physically ill
 16. Misrepresenting the message as a government or court document

Right attitude for successful collections

- Any emotional reaction on the part of the debtor may reduce the chances of recovery.
- Successful collection depends on the following factors
- Understanding of Human Nature
- Knowledge of collection policies and laws
- Using persuasive / positive appeals effectively

i) Appeal to fairness & justice

ii) Appeal to pride

iii) Appeal to Goodwill

iv) Appeal to sympathy

Begin with assumption that most people will pay

- Give no impression that you doubt the honesty of the debtor
- Use a courteous, reasonable tone but become firmer
- And more demanding during the later stages of the series
- Remain with the law, don’t harass
- Show understanding and flexibility while writing delinquent accounts
- Send collection notices quickly and regularly
- Never imply in your messages that payment can be avoided or postponed.
- Retain goodwill throughout the series

- Present you evidence and stick to the facts
- Persuade the debtors of the benefit he will receive by paying
- State clearly the specific action the debtor must take

Collection Letter Series

Collection letters are usually sent in a series. The first is mildest and most understanding, with the letters getting gradually more insistent. The final letter in this series, when all efforts have failed, threatens to turn the matter over to a lawyer or collection agency or court of law. Of course, the tone of any letter in the series will vary, from positive and mild to negative and strong, depending upon the past payment record of the particular customer. The intervals between the letters may also vary, from ten days to a month at the start, from one to two weeks later on.

Every letter in a collection series should contain certain information.

1. The amount owed;
2. How long the bill is overdue;
3. A specific action the customer may take.

Some companies also like to include a SALES APPEAL, even late in the series, as an extra incentive for payment.

The majority of bills are paid within ten days of receipt, with nearly all the rest being paid within the month. Therefore, when a bill is a month overdue, action is called for. Still, the collection process must begin gently.

Statement of Account / Reminder
(The 1st Step)

The monthly statement reminds the customer of outstanding bills. If it is ignored, it should be followed (about a week or ten days later) by a second statement. The second statement should contain a notice (in the form of a rubber stamp or sticker) stating "Past Due" or "Please Remit". An alternative is to include a card or slip with the statement, alerting the customer to the overdue bill. The notice could be phrased in formal, possibly even simple language; it is an objective reminder that does not embarrass the customer with too early a personal appeal:

Our records indicate that the balance of Rs. 4000/- on your account is now past due. Payment is requested.

(OR)

Our records show that your September payment is more than a week over-due. If you have recently mailed your cheque for Rs.1548700/- we thank you. If not, please send it in quickly.

Stage 2

If the objective statement and reminder fail to get results, the collection process must gradually become more emotional and personal. The second collection message, however, should still be friendly. It should seek to excuse the unpaid bill as an oversight; the tone should convey the assumption that the customer intends to pay. At this stage, too, stress on future sales, rather than on payment.

Consider the following letter:

Dear Mr. Bilal,

Enclosed is a duplicate list of your credit charges from December – 200---. It is sent to you as a friendly reminder that the balance on your account with us is past due. Please take a few minutes today to send us your cheque for Rs. 224760. Use the postpaid addressed envelope provided for your use.

Yours truly,

When a credit customer does not respond to personal reminder messages, you can assume that something is preventing the customer from paying. It may be that the customer is unhappy with the purchased merchandise or is facing financial difficulty. Whatever the reason may be for holding up payment, you want the customer to (1) explain why the payment hasn't been made or (2) settle the account.

The following letter illustrates the approach generally used in requesting an explanation:

Dear Mr. Javed,

We are concerned about your overdue account. Several reminder notices have been mailed to you, and we expected to receive your Rs. 38400/- cheque in the mail. But so far we haven't.

There may be a circumstance beyond your control that prevents you from settling this account. If so, please write me about it. I'm certain we can work out a payment arrangement after we know what your situation is.

Just think how good you will feel, Mr. Javed, when your account with us has been paid in full.

Yours truly,

Appeal(s) for Payment

Step 3

The next collection message is an appeal to the credit customer to pay. This is a stern letter, but calmly written. Typical appeals are to the customer's pride or sense of fair play.

Your appeal for payment should not threaten to take the debtor to court unless you actually plan to. Give the person another chance to save a good credit standing by sending payment before the deadline – usually 10 to 12 days from the date of the letter. The following letter is an example of a courteous request for payment which appeals to both the customer's pride and his sense of fair play.

This letter should stress the customer's self-interest by pointing out the importance of prompt payment and the dangers of losing credit standing. The letter should convey the urgency and seriousness of the situation.

Dear Mr. Naeem,

Your good credit reputation enabled you to purchase a Rs. 15000.00 suit from us over three months ago. We were glad to place your name on our credit list at that time, and we made it clear that accounts are due on the 15th of the month following the purchase. When you bought the suit, you accepted those terms.

Your credit reputation is a valuable asset. We want you to keep it that way because of the advantages it gives you. You have enjoyed a liberal extension of time, but to be fair to our other customers, you must pay the amount that is past due by March 2.

Won't you please send us your check for the said amount today?

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Naeem,

We are truly at a loss. We cannot understand why you still have not cleared your balance of Rs. 5000/-, which is now three months overdue.

Although you have been a reliable customer for 5 years, we are afraid you are placing your credit standing in jeopardy. Only you, by sending us a check today, can ensure your reputation and secure the continued convenience of buying on credit.

We would not like to lose a valued friend, Mr. Naeem. Please allow us to keep serving you.

Sincerely,

Stage 4

Finally, payment must be demanded. The threat of legal action or the intervention of a collection agency is sometimes all that will induce a customer to pay. In some companies; moreover, an executive other than the credit manager signs this last letter as a means of impressing the customer with the finality of the situation. Still, the fourth collection letter should allow the customer one last chance to pay before steps are taken.

Final Collection Letter

Dear Mr. Naeem,

Our Collection Department has informed me of their intention to file suit as you have failed to answer any of our requests for payment of Rs.5000/-, which is now 4 months overdue.

Before taking this action, however, I would like to make a personal appeal to your sound business judgment. I feel certain that, if you telephone me, we can devise some means to settle this matter out of court.

Therefore, I ask that you get in touch with me by the 25th of the month so that I may avoid taking steps which neither of us would like.

Truly yours,

A customer may, for example, offer an excuse or promise payment; he may make a partial payment or request special arrangements. At this point, the series would be inappropriate.

For instance, if your customer has owed Rs. 6000/- on account for two months and sends you a cheque for Rs. 1500/-, you may send a letter such as the following:

Dear Mr. Naeem,

Thank you for your cheque for Rs. 1500/-. The balance remaining on your account is now Rs. 4500/-

Since you have requested an extension, we offer you the following payment plan: Rs. 1500/- by the 15th of the month for the next three months.

If you have another plan in mind, please telephone my office so that we may discuss it. Otherwise, we will expect your next cheque for Rs. 1500/- on September 15.

Sincerely yours,

First Reminder after Monthly Statement

Although the nursing home has been in operation only a short time, the information concerning the enterprise has been favorable and credit was granted. A regular statement is mailed on March 10. When no response is received by March 20, a second statement is sent.

Second Reminder

This is a copy of the regular statement on which the following message appears at the bottom:

Mr. Jameel: To date, no payments have been received from you, and we're curious to know why? Perhaps it is merely an oversight. If there are other reasons we should be aware of, please let us know. Otherwise, may we have your cheque for Rs.50000?

Third Reminder

Situation

Nursing Home still has not responded to the previous reminders. A third reminder is sent ten days after the second one went out.

Third Reminder

This is a copy of the regular statement on which the following message appears at the bottom:

Mr. Jameel: Is there some reason we have not heard from you? The amount you owe us is now long past due and is beginning to concern us. Don't you think we are entitled to an explanation? Please let us hear from you at once.

Fourth Reminder-Telephone Call

Situation

The Credit Manager at Medix Hospital Supply Company has heard nothing from Nursing Home and, on April 3, decides to telephone the owner, Mr. Jameel.

The Telephone Call

When the Credit Manager, reaches Mr. Jameel he may start off something like this:

"Hello, Mr. Jameel. I'm Kamran at Hospital Supply Company, and I'm calling to ask about your plans for paying your account, which, as you know, is now over 30 days past due."

Jameel is given an opportunity to tell his side of the story (he has just been so busy putting the nursing home in operation that he had to let some of his paperwork slide.) At the end of the conversation, Jameel promises to send his cheque right away.

Fifth Reminder-Telegram

Situation

A week has passed since the credit manager spoke on the telephone with Jameel, and no payment has been received. She decides that the next step is to send a telegram.

The Telegram

DURING OUR TELEPHONE CONVERSATION ON APRIL 3, YOU PROMISED IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF YOUR ACCOUNT. YOUR CHECK HAS NOT ARRIVED, AND IF IT IS NOT ALREADY IN THE MAIL, I URGE YOU TO SEND IT TODAY.

When The Buyer Is At Fault

Dear Mr. Faheem:

Your balance with Murray's Furniture Warehouse is 120 days past due. Our efforts to collect from you by mail, fax, and telephone have been fruitless. You still owe Rs. 50,000 of the original Rs. 75000 in purchases you made on June 8. The last check we received from you was on August 8.

If we do not receive a payment within 10 days, your account will be turned over to Collection Agency for further handling.

Sincerely,

When The Buyer Is At Fault

Dear Mr. Rashid,

Despite our numerous attempts by letter, telephone, and numerous onsite visits to your restaurant to collect your past due balance, you have neglected to make any effort in making payments to Florists. Your restaurant is now Rs. 5000 in arrears. Having broken a series of promises to pay, we cannot trust your word any longer and must take more serious action.

We have turned your account over to our collection service. They are authorized to use any and all legal means deemed appropriate to collect your payment.

Sincerely,

LETTER WRITING

Sales Letters

To some extent, every letter is a sales letter. You are selling your organization's image and goodwill. These letters are an easy and effective way of securing business. No other type of letter influences so many people or brings as big a return in terms of money as this letter.

More so than other letters, the sales letter is highly specialized, and its writing requires exceptional ability and experience.

There are two kinds of sales letters:

- (i) Solicited letter (the organization is invited to respond to sales messages.)
- (ii) Unsolicited letter (the organization sends out uninvited messages to sell a product or service)

Writing whatever type of sales letter, follow these principles.

1. Know your Buyer

- First identify the characteristics that describe the most likely buyer for your products or services. From research or experience, build a "composite" buyer. The sex, age, occupation, geographic location, financial situation, and other characteristics of the "average" buyer. Determine what appeals will be used in letter. Defining your targeted buyer's characteristics helps you discover the needs and desires of these prospective buyers.
- For example, you wouldn't try to sell a "Sixty-Five Plus" insurance plan to college students.

The writer of sales letters has a choice of many different appeals. Those used depend upon the aim of the letter, the nature of the product, and the market – the people who will receive the letter. Buyer usually spends their money for these reasons:

- For comfort (air conditioners)
- To make money (stock)
- To escape physical pain (corn and callous remedy)
- To save money (storm windows)
- To save time (microwave oven)
- To protect family (smoke detector)
- To imitate others (sunglasses)
- To be in style (new coat)
- To be different (exclusive hat)
- To avoid trouble (casualty insurance)
- For health (toothpaste)
- To take advantage of opportunities (investment property)
- For enjoyment (television set)
- To enhance reputation (charitable contribution)
- For cleanliness (soap)
- To satisfy appetite (candy)
- To avoid effort (power lawn mower)
- For beautiful possessions (new cell phone)
- To be popular (dancing lessons)
- To safeguard possessions (fire insurance)
- To be attractive (jewelry, garments)
- To be adventurous (travel)

2. Prepare a List of Buyers

Next, you need a good mailing list. The obvious place to start is your organization's own list of buyers. You can also buy lists from organizations that specialize in compiling and selling them. For sales effectiveness, a good mailing list must contain the correct names and addresses of people or organizations that have in common characteristics that make them likely buyers for your products or services.

3. Analyze the Product

What specific feature of the product or service makes it attractive or useful or appealing? What features should be emphasized? What features should be played down? (These analyses are usually made along with Step 1.) Letters that present a product in terms of what prospective buyers think of it and how they can use it do more than make sales--they win satisfied customers.

4. Decide on the Central Selling Point

The central selling point (CSP) should be the item of information most likely to persuade the buyer to buy a product or service. After analyzing the buyer and the product. Build your letter around this central selling point. The CSP might be appearance, durability, comfort, convenience, price, or any other positive feature that is likely to have the greatest influence on your reader's purchasing decision.

Writing Solicited Sales Letters

Solicited sales are the letters that you write in response to an inquiry. With these letters, the organization has one central goal: to get responses quickly to someone's request for information, use the direct plan for the solicited letter.

Organizational Plan Responding to Solicited Letters

1. Opening paragraph use the good-news approach.
 - a. Answer the inquirer's questions favorably.
 - b. Indicate that the requested material will be sent.
2. Body
 - a. Answer additional questions.
 - b. Provide educational, resale, or sales promotion information.
 - c. Be truthful about negative information.
 - d. Arrange your answers so your positive responses are at the beginning and the end; embed (put in the middle) your weaker or negative comments.
3. Action ending
 - a. Make the action easy.
 - b. Suggest benefits to reader.
 - c. Focus on the positive aspects.

Just Look at the following positive opening

With pleasure we received your letter and it is with further pleasure that we are able to open a credit account with our store. All the necessary forms to initiate that account are included with this letter.

Writing Unsolicited Sales Letters

Unsolicited sales letter are those letters which you write to people who can be persuaded through these letters to buy your product or service. These letters demand superior writing skills. Often you will work with a marketing department or even an ad agency; they will make recommendations about the mailing lists, the timing, the core theme, and the visual presentation of brochures and accompanying material.

Once you know what you need to say and whom do you want to say it to, decide how you're going to say it. Will you send just a letter, or will you include brochures, samples, response cards, and the like? Will the letter be printed with and additional colour or special symbols or logos? How many pages will it run?

You'll also need to decide whether to conduct a multistage campaign, with several mailings and some sort of telephone or in-person follow-up, or to rely on a single mailing.

All these decisions depend on the audience you're trying to reach-their characteristics, their likely acceptance of or resistance to your message-and what you're trying to get them to do. In general, expensive items and hard-to-accept propositions call for a more elaborate campaign than low-cost products and simple actions.

A. Attention

1. Design a positive opening that awakens a favorable association with the product, need, or cause.
2. Write the opening so that it's appropriate, fresh, honest, interesting, specific, and relevant.
3. Promise a benefit to the reader
4. Keep the first paragraph short, preferably two to five lines, and sometimes only one.
5. For sales, letters, get attention with a provocative question, a significant/startling fact, a solution to a problem, a special offer/gift, a testimonial, a current event, an illustration, a comparison, an event in the reader's life, a problem the reader may face, or a quotation.

Getting Attention

Sales letters start with an attention-getting device. Professionals use some common techniques to attract audience attention. Look at the following beginnings:

1. A piece of genuine news. "In the past 60 days, the commercial electricity billings have shrunk by 12 percent."
2. The most attractive feature plus the associated benefit. "New control device ends problems with every type of pilferage!"
3. An intriguing number. "Here are three great secrets of the world's most loved entertainers."
4. A sample of the product. "Here's your free sample of the new medicated tooth brush."
5. A specific trait shared by the audience. Busy executives need another 'timesaving' device"
6. A provocative question. "Are you tired of watching inflation eat away at your hard-earned profits?"
7. A challenge. "Don't waste another day wondering how you're going to become the success you've always wanted to be!"
8. A solution to a problem. "Tired of chilly air rushing through the cracks around your windows? Stay warm and save energy with Storm Seal Weather stripping."
10. Stressing benefit of previous students.

In the last university examination of the university one of our students topped securing record marks. In addition, seven out of top ten positions were bagged by our students you too can be a top notcher!

11. For the ninth cricket world cup our juices were announced the official drinks of the world cup. Besides, the world cup management committee declared our juices the best soft drinks.

12. Convincing readers through free trial

You can keep the monthly Asia for two weeks. Read the articles and even if you feel that it is not worth your amount just give us a call, our representative will bring back your amount next day.

Sales Letter Interest

b. Interest

1. State information clearly, vividly, and persuasively, relating it to the reader's concerns.
2. Develop the central selling point.
3. Feature the product in two ways: physical description and reader benefits.
4. Place benefits first, or interweave them with a physical description.
5. Describe objective details of the need or product (size, shape, color, scent, sound texture, etc.)
6. Use psychological appeals to present the sensation, satisfaction, or pleasure readers will gain.
7. Blend cold facts with warm feelings.

Arousing Your Desire

C. Desire

1. Enlist one or more appeals to support the central idea (selling point).
2. If the product is valued mainly because of its appearance, describe its physical details.
3. If the product is machinery or technical equipment, describe its sturdy construction, fine crafting, and other technical details in terms that help readers visualize themselves using it.
4. Include technical sketches and meaningful pictures, charts, and graphs, if necessary.
5. For sales letters, provide test results from recognized experts, laboratories, or authoritative agencies.

MEMORANDUM & CIRCULAR

Purpose of Memo

When you wish to write to someone within your own company, you will send a memorandum. Memos are used to communicate with other employees, may be located – whether in the same office, in the same building, or in a branch office many miles away.

Because the interoffice memorandum form was developed to save time, the formality of an inside address, salutation, and complimentary closing is omitted. Otherwise, however, office memos and letters have a great deal in common.

Formality is Omitted

The memorandum or 'memo' is a very flexible form used within an organization for communication at all levels and for many different reasons. It performs internally the same function as a letter does in external communication by an organization, it is used for reports, briefings or instructions, brief messages or 'notes' and any kind of internal communication that is more easily or clearly conveyed in writing (rather than face-to-face or on the telephone).

Tone of Memorandums

In most companies and organization, memorandums are written in the first person, just as business letters are. Informal writing style characterizes the memos. The tone of the memo is influenced by the position held by the writer in relation to that held by the receiver. Also, the topic under consideration plays an important part in determining tone. Obviously a person writing to a company official to report the results of a financial audit will be more formal than a person writing a co-worker about some routine matter.

An important factor is the personality of the individual receiving the memorandum. The president, for example, may insist on informality, whereas a peer might like a formal, impersonal tone. Therefore, the effective business writer must evaluate the position of the reader, the topic under consideration, and the personality of the reader when setting the tone of the memo.

Flow of Memo

A memorandum may be send upwards, downwards or sideways in the organization. It may be sent from one individual to another, from one department to another or from one individual to a department or larger body of staff. The channel will be the internal mail system of the organization, which may range from a bank of 'pigeon holes' for delivery and collection in person, to a desk-to-desk delivery system. Special 'internal mail envelopes', designed for re-use (allowing each recipient name to be simply crossed out and replaced with the next), are commonly used.

Format

Memorandum format will vary slightly according to the degree of formality required and the organization's policy on matters like filing and authorization of memoranda by their writer. Follow the conventions of 'house style' in your own organization. A typical format, including all the required elements, is illustrated below.

Writing Memorandums

There are usually three main parts to a memorandum:

1. The heading
2. The subject and date
3. The message

Occasionally, when official approval or authority is required, the memorandum may be concluded with a line for the signature of the person originating the correspondence:

The Heading: the heading of a memorandum is usually printed.

In the To and Form sections. The business title of each person is often included, particularly when the memorandum is being sent to a person whose office is in another city. In the To section, a courtesy title – Miss, Mrs., Ms., Mr., Dr. – is sometimes included. However, in the Form section, the writer does not use a courtesy title.

To:

From

Date:

Subject

Main idea

Opening paragraph or sentence, the reason for writing and context of the message, including appropriate details.

Explanation

Necessary details to support the opening statements. Here the substance of message is set out logically and clearly. This may be less formal than a letter, so you can use numbered points.

Closing

Closing paragraph or sentence. State clearly what is required of the recipient in response. Remember who your recipient is, what is his status, his background, education, practical experience etc. Generally every memo concludes with suggestions for future action or request on future action.

Organizational Plans

- You may find it necessary to write a persuasive or balance-news memo. Rather than take a direct approach
- You may like a step-by-step method to your request or bad news
- Allow reader to complete reading the memo and come to the conclusion with you
- Allow reader to see the reasoning that leads or supports to the idea you are conveying
- Maintain goodwill.

Structure & Style (A5 memo)

- A memorandum, as the name suggests is an aid to memory of the reader.
- Be used for brief messages.

- i) Providing confirmation and record of the various plan decision & activities
- ii) Of the organization

A4 Memo

It may be used for

- i) Making informal reports
- ii) Outlining new policies
- iii) Giving briefing & instruction etc.

Why are memorandum written

Written records help to

- i) determine responsibility
- ii) clear up inconsistencies
- iii) record needed information

Circular

Introduction

Circular letters are used to send the same information to a number of people extensively used in sales campaigns and for announcing important developments in business, such as extension, reorganizations, changes of address, etc.

A circular letter is prepared once only and it may then be duplicated for distribution to the various recipients. Names, addresses and individual salutations may be inserted after duplication in order to personalize the letter.

Writing Plan

Although circulars are being sent to many people, it is important to suggest an interest in the recipient by giving them a personal touch. Remember the following rules:

- Be brief – people will not read a long circular
- Make the letter as personal as possible by addressing each letter to a particularly person, by name if you know it. Use dear Mr. Atif Faheem instead of Dear Reader, Dear Subscriber or Dear Customer instead of Dear Sir or Madam. Never use the plural form for the salutation – remember, one recipient will read each individual letter.
- Create the impression of personal interest by using you, never our customers, all customers, our clients, everyone.
- Explain why you are writing with more care than you would if you and your topic were already known to the recipient through previous specific contact. Given some suspicion of circulars, these days, you will have to establish your own credibility – or another motive for reading on – fairly quickly.
- Express yourself in a way that will be understandable and congenial to everyone in a wide audience with varying backgrounds and abilities.
- Don't include detailed information or complex ideas.
- Make your letter more persuasive – not just to achieve its purposes, but to motivate the recipient to start reading it.
- Use word processing technology to personalize the circular to a very large extent.

Dear Mr Ali

Yours sincerely

Dear Mr Ali

To meet the growing demand for cosmetic products in this area we have decided to extend our business by opening a new department.

Our new department will carry an extensive range of cosmetic at prices, which compare very favorably with those, charged by other suppliers.

We would like the opportunity to demonstrate our new merchandise to you, and are therefore arranging a special window display during the week beginning 2 June. The official opening of our new department will take place on Friday 3 July.

We hope you will visit our new department during opening week and give us the opportunity to show you that it maintains the reputation enjoyed by our other departments for giving sound value for money.

Ours faithfully.

MINUTES OF THE MEETING

Preparing Minutes of Meetings

In a typical business, many committees and task forces operate within the company. The purpose of committees is to discuss various problems and to make recommendations to management. A standing committee is one that operates permanently year after year, although its members may change. A task force is a group of people who are appointed to solve a specific problem; when they make their recommendation on the 'task' assigned to them, the task force is disbanded. Each department may have several committees that meet periodically – usually once a week, every two weeks, or monthly. If you are working in a sales department, for example, there may be committees on advertising, sales conferences, commissions, forms control, product development, public relations, and so on.

A meeting has been called....

Statutory because the law demands it	... shareholders', creditors', director', councillors' meetings
Managerial To progress company affairs	to inform of policy, to brief, to delegate tasks, to discuss problems, to reach group decisions, etc
Creative to generate ideas, to open up new possibilities or avenues of action	to 'brainstorm' around the idea of what the firm could design, manufacture; to produce an advertising slogan, poster, etc.
Negotiating to reach a solution to a problem acceptable to two sides with different interest	management and trade union to agree pay increases
General/ public to report back to a group membership, or to air matters of public interest (members & roles)	Annual General Meeting of shareholders or club membership meeting; public enquiries into planning proposals

Members of Meetings & their role

The president asked Sara Zaman, chairperson of the investment committee, for the committee recommendation....

The president asked Ahmad Ali of Lauder, Bennet, and Laser, the club's broker, to comment.... Mr Habib announced that the club's annual picnic is schedule for Saturday, Sept 14, at Al-Hamra Hall in Lahore.....

The meeting was adjourned at 5:30 pm

Respectfully submitted,

Hassan
Secretary

Minutes of Formal Meetings

Minutes of meetings that follow parliamentary procedure are somewhat different in form from the informal minutes illustrated here. Formal minutes do not include discussions. Only motions, resolutions, committee assignments and reports, and other specific accomplishments are included. Topical headings are used for easy reference and how the recorder has briefly summarized a speaker's remarks. Note, too, that motions should be worded specifically followed by the name of the person who made the motion and the name of the seconded.

Resolutions to express sympathy, appreciation, congratulations, and the like are often passed at formal meetings.

The paragraphs giving the reasons for the resolution are introduced by the word WHEREAS (followed by a comma) and that the paragraphs stating the action to be taken are introduced by the word RESOLVED (also followed by a comma).

Time & Place: The regular monthly meeting of the Historical-Commercial Club of Lahore was called to order by the president, Naeem Ahmad, on Friday, February 8, 2006, at 2 pm in the Jinnah room of the Plaza Hotel

Producing the Minutes

Resolution minutes

Some types of meeting – those of boards of directions, for example – record only the decision reached, usually after a vote. The arguments, initial disagreements or conflicting views remain unwritten or unrecorded. Thus a lengthy discussion on the pro's and con's of keeping a barely profitable branch store open may be badly summarized as:

5 Liberty Branch

It was resolved that the company's liberty branch be closed with effect from 31 May 2006 and the premises, fixtures and fittings offered for sale

Such minutes usually include the word 'resolved' and may indicate the pattern of voting. Otherwise, the items, 'Apologies for Absence', 'Minutes of the Last Meeting', 'Matters Arising' and 'Date of Next Meeting' follow the pattern of narrative minutes. Note that in some formal meetings, the 'Matters Arising' and 'Any Other Business' items are not included, as a tighter rein is kept on what may be discussed.

Narrative Minutes (fuller picture & view)

Sometimes referred to as minutes of narration, narrative minutes tell more of the 'story of what happened and who said what at a meeting'. The main points of the background and discussion leading to a decision are recorded, and so anyone reading such minutes will gain a much fuller picture of a committee's work and views.

Narrative minutes are recorded in reported speech. This simply involves referring to committee members in the third person – either by their office – 'The chairman said..' or by name, 'Mr Naeem asked whether' When decisions are reached by a vote, expressions such as, 'it was generally agreed that....' 'It was therefore decided that....' Are used to introduce the details of the decision. Further, to keep the record objective and neutral, the passive is often used: 'The secretary was asked to write to the Council to.....'. (Care regarding narration)

Care must be taken when recording narrative minutes that verb tenses are appropriate and that the time interval between the actual discussion at the meeting and the later recording of the minutes does not lead to confusion:

He said he would contact the suppliers next week.

At the time this statement was made, 'next week' was true, but if the minutes were distributed and read a fortnight after the meeting took place, it would no longer be true; this expressions like 'the following week' are more accurate.

Action Minutes

Busy committees sometimes like to introduce a right hand blank column beside the minutes in order to put a designated committee member's name against a particular task to be carried out:

6 Annual games

The secretary was asked to seek approval to use the company sports Ground again.

Action by: Secretary

Some rules of indirect speech

'I'm sorry I'm late. I missed the bus.' DIRECT SPEECH

He said that he was sorry he was late. He had missed the bus. REPORTED SPEECH VERSION.

He apologized for being late. He had missed the bus.

Some rules

Rule one: persons/pronouns

I

he, she

you

we

they

you (pl)

Rule two: the tenses of verbs

Rule three: the distancing effect

Today... that day, now.... then, here.... there, this that, these those, tomorrow ... the next/ following day, yesterday the previous day

Rule four: conveying the tone of the direct speech

If the reported speech writer is not very careful, the reporting may easily slip into a dull 'he said, she said, he said, she said', so it is important to vary the words that introduce the reported speech:

Asked that, wondered whether, strongly denied that, confirmed that, suggested that, suggested that, etc.

BUSINESS REPORTS

Model Business ReportsA Model Report

October 10, 2003

The General Manager,
Fit Garment Industries,
Multan Road Lahore.

Dear Sir,

Subject: Report on the strike of the workers in the factory.

Following your instructions, I have probed into the matter regarding the strike of all the workers in the factory. Here are my findings.

On Monday morning, in the production unit 2, two workers started a fight on a money matter. Ahmad had lent some money to Kareem, who made several promises but did not return a single penny.

On Monday morning Ahmad demanded an immediate return of his amount but instead of an apologetic behaviour Kareem abused Ahmad. Hot remarks were exchanged. Kareem picked up a hammer and hit it hard on Ahmad's head. It started bleeding.

He was rushed to the hospital by the workers. Members of the labour union reached and all the workers took out a procession. The President of the union gave a call for strike. They raised slogans against the culprit. While addressing the mob, union leaders demanded a prompt termination of the culprit. They wanted to continue the strike till the acceptance of their demand.

However, on the assurance of the Production Manager, they agreed to call off their strike. Everything was done amicably.

Sir,

You have asked for my suggestions, so I recommend Mr. Kareem's termination. I do feel that a case of fraud and assault should be registered in the police station. Mr. Ahmad should be treated at the expenses of the company and should be granted paid leave for one month.

Yours truly,

Definition

A Business Report is an impartial, objective, planned presentation of facts to one or more persons for a specific business purpose. An orderly, objective message used to convey information from one organizational area to another or from one institution to another to assist in decision making or problem solving.”

Reports have been classified in numerous ways by management and by report-preparation authorities. We classify reports on the bases of their forms, uses, contents, etc.

Purpose of report

Purpose of Report	Common Examples	Reparation & Distribution
To monitor and control operations	Plans, operating reports, personal activity reports	Internal reports move upward on recurring basis; external reports go to selected audiences.
To implement policies and procedures	Lasting guideline, position papers	Internal reports move downward or on a non-recurring basis
To comply with regulatory requirements	Reports IRS, SEC, EEOC, Human Rights Commission	External reports are sent on a recurring basis

Definition

Purpose of Report	Common Examples	Reparation & Distribution
To obtain new business or findings	Sales proposals	External reports are sent on non-recurring basis
To document client work	Interim progress reports, final reports	External reports are sent on a non-recurring basis
To guide decisions	Research reports, justification reports, trouble shooting reports (Classifications)	Internal reports move upward on a non-recurring basis

Classification of Report

Formal or Informal

Formal reports are carefully structured; they stress objectivity and organization, contain much detail, and are written in a style that tends to eliminate such elements as personal pronouns.

Informal reports are usually short messages with natural, casual use of language. The internal memorandum generally can be described as an informal report.

Short or Long Reports?

“Short-or-long” can be a confusing classification for reports. A one-page memorandum is obviously short, and a term paper of twenty pages is obviously long. What about in-between lengths? One important distinction generally holds true: as a report becomes longer, it takes on more characteristics of formal reports. Thus, the formal-informal and short-long classifications are closely related.

What Makes A Good Business Report

Business reports are like bridges spanning time and space. Organizations use them to provide a formal, verifiable link among people, places, and times. Some reports are needed for internal communication; others are vehicles for corresponding with outsiders. Some are required as a permanent record; others are needed to solve an immediate problem or to answer a passing question. Many move upward through the chain of command to help managers monitor the various units in the organization; some move downward to explain management decisions to lower-level employees responsible for day-to-day operations.

The purpose of a business report is to convey essential information in an organized, useful format. And despite technological advances, the ability to accumulate data, organize facts, and compose a readable text remains a highly marketable skill.

A well-prepared business report will provide COMPLETE, ACCURATE information about an aspect of a company's operations. The subject of a report may vary from expenses to profits, production to sales, marketing trends to customer relations. The information provided by a report is often meant to influence decisions, to determine changes, improvements, or solutions to problems. Therefore, the report must also be CLEAR, CONCISE, and READABLE.

The format of a business report may vary, from a brief informal report intended for in-house use to a voluminous formal report intended for a national public distribution. Some reports consist entirely of prose while others consist of statistics; and still other reports may employ a combination of prose, tables, charts, and graphs.

The style of a report depends upon the audience. An informal report to be read only by close associates may be worded personally; in such a report “I” or “we” is acceptable. A formal report, on the other hand, must be impersonal and expressed entirely in the third person. Note the difference

Style

Informal:

I recommend that the spring campaign concentrate on newspaper and television advertising.

Formal:

It is recommended that the spring campaign concentrate on newspaper and television advertising.

Informal:

After discussing the matter with our department managers, we came up with the following information.

Formal:

The following report is based upon information provided by the managers of the Accounting, Marketing, Personnel, and Advertising Departments.

Deciding on Format and Length

Preprinted form. Basically for “fill in the blank” reports. Most are relatively short (five or fewer pages) and deal with routine information, often mainly numerical. Use this format when it's requested by the person authorizing the report.

Letter. Common for reports of five or fewer pages that are directed to outsiders. These reports include all the normal parts of a letter, but they may also have headings, footnotes, tables, and figures.

Memo. Common for short (fewer than ten pages) informal reports distributed within an organization. Memos have headings at the top: To, From, Date, and Subject. In addition, like longer reports, they often have internal headings and sometimes have visual.(organizational plan)

Deciding on Approach

Audience attitude is the basis for decisions about organization. When the audience is considered either receptive or open minded, use the direct approach.

Lead off with a summary of your key findings, conclusions, and recommendations. This “up-front” approach is by far the most popular and convenient order for business reports because it saves time and makes the best of the report easy to follow. For those who have questions or want more information, later parts of the report provide complete findings and supporting details. In addition to being more convenient for readers, the direct approach also produces a more forceful report. You are sure of yourself when you state your conclusions confidently at the outset.

Types of Reports

A memo report is a cross between interoffice memo and a formal report

Memo reports can be used to:

- Answer a request for information
- Report progress
- Make recommendations
- State facts
- Communicates ideas
- Send statistical data
- Explain trend within an organization

Two types of Memo Reports

1. Informational Memorandum Reports
2. Analytical memo Reports

Informational Memorandum Reports

The central purpose of informational reports is to inform and to summarize information, similar to the speech to inform. Obviously, these reports vary widely in content, depending on type of business, purpose, topics discussed, and readers’ needs. The following reports are often used in organizations:

Information Memo reports will

- Inform
- To summarize some information requested
- Organize information objectively
- Make recommendation

Conference Reports

Topics for conference reports range from summaries of personal sales called conferences to write-ups of meetings attended by hundreds of persons. For example, A credit or collection manager or account executive may make similar reports after conferences with clients. The text of such reports is usually organized by topics discussed or presented simply in a chronological order. Some firms have standardized headings for the often-written reports to ensure that the same information or main topics are recorded in all of them.

Progress Reports

Progress reports show, “progress,” accomplishments, or activity over time or at a given stage of a major assignment. The organizational plan is usually inductive, including topics similar to these.

1. Introduction (purpose, nature of project)
2. Description of accomplishments during the reporting period.

3. Unanticipated problems (if any)
4. Plans for the next reporting period.
5. Summary (overall appraisal of progress to date)
6. (Periodic report)

Periodic Reports

They are routine reports prepared at regular time interval-daily, weekly, monthly quarterly or annually.

Examples of such reports are:

1. Sales Reports
2. Financial Reports

They reports are prepared on pre-printed form.

Analytical Memorandum Reports

This analytical memorandum report, seeks to analyze a situation or problem; it may end with or without a specific recommendation.

Such reports:

- On the causes of decline in Sales Volume
- On the evaluation of a person before recruitment
- On individual being considered for promotion
- On the analysis of a particular book

Recommendation-Justification Reports

Many analytical reports will have a special purpose: to recommend a change or remain with the status quo (policy), support the idea that something is desirable or undesirable (value), or defend the accuracy of information (fact). Your report may be in response to a specific request, or it may be voluntary.

- Organizing memo reports
- Itemize the information
- Present the fact with absolute fairness and accuracy
- Be careful not to mix you opinion with the facts you report
- Reserve your comments for your conclusions and recommendations(letter report)

BUSINESS REPORTS

Letters Reports

Letter reports are of two types:

1. Informational Letter Reports
2. Analytical Letter Reports

1. Informational Letter reports include

- A staff report to financial officer regarding issues concerning personnel turnover in the sales department
- A report in reply to inquiry about product and services provided by your Company

2. Analytical Letter Reports

These include investigation of an issue or problem

- Calculation of financial ratios of a company in order to command on its financial condition.(Format)

A letter report is simply a report in letterform: it is often used when sending information to a reader outside your organization. It includes:

1. Date
2. Inside Address
3. Salutation
4. Body (the heart of the report)
5. Complimentary close
6. Signature
7. Reference section

Often the letter report has a subject line, usually placed a line or two below the salutation. Its length may range from two to five (seldom more) pages. And it may have two purposes: informational or analytical.(7 errors in logic to be effective in report))

Seven Errors in Logic

For your report to be effective, it must be logical. If you learn how to think logically, you'll also write more logically. Here are some common errors to avoid.

1. Lack of objectivity. Seeing only the facts that support your views and ignoring any contradictory information:

“Although half the survey population expressed dissatisfaction with our current product, a sizable portion finds it satisfactory.” (You may be tempted to ignore the dissatisfied half instead of investigating the reasons for their dissatisfaction.)(hasty generalizations,hidden assumptions,either or scenarios)

2. Hasty generalization. Forming judgments on the basis of insufficient evidence or special cases:

“Marketing strategy Z increased sales 15 percent in Lahore supermarkets. Let's try it in Karachi.” (Lahore and Karachi are probably vastly different markets).

3. Hidden assumptions. Hiding a questionable major premise:

“We are marketing product X in Print media because we marketed product Y in Print media.” (Who says product X and product Y should be marketed the same way?)

4. Either or scenarios. Setting up two alternatives and not allowing for others:

“We must open a new plant by spring, or we will go bankrupt.” (Surely there are other ways to avoid bankruptcy).false causal relationship,begged questions))

5. False causal relationships. Assuming that event A caused event B merely because A preceded B:

“Sales increased 20 percent as soon as we hired the new sales director.” (Something besides the new sales director might have been responsible for increased sales).

6. Begged questions. Assuming as proven what you are seeking to prove:

“We need a standard procedure so that we will have standard results.’ (But why is standardization important?)

7. Personal attacks or appeals to popular prejudice. Sinking people or ideas you don’t like by chaining them to irrelevant but unpopular actions or ideas:

“Mr Naeem mishandled the budget last years, so he can’t be expected to motivate his staff.” (Mr Naeem's accounting ability may have nothing to do with his ability to motivate staff members).

Main Features of the Report

Following are main features of the report.

The Opening

As the name suggests, the opening is the first section in any report. A good opening accomplishes at least three things:

- i) Introduces the subject of the report
- ii) Indicates why the subject is important
- iii) Previews the main ideas and the order in which they will be covered.

If you fail to provide readers with these clues to the structure of your report, they’ll read aimlessly and miss important points, much like drivers trying to find their way through a strange city without a map.

Headings and Lists

A heading is a brief title at the start of a subdivision within a report that cues readers about the content of the section that follows. Headings are useful markers for clarifying the framework of a report. They visually indicate shifts from one idea to the next, and, when subheadings (lower level headings) and headings are both used, they help readers see the relationship between subordinate and main ideas. In addition, busy readers can quickly understand the gist of a document simply by scanning the headings.

Headings within a given section that are of the same level of importance should be phrased in parallel form. In other words, if one heading begins with a verb, all same-level headings in that section should begin with verbs. If one is a noun phrase, all should be noun phrases. Putting comparable ideas in similar terms tell readers that the ideas are related. The only exception might be such descriptive headings as “Introduction” at the beginning of a report and “Conclusions” and “Recommendations” at the end. Many companies specify a format for headings.

A list is a series of words, names, or items arranged in a specific order. Setting off important ideas in a list provides an additional structural clue. Lists can show the sequence of ideas or visually heighten their impact. In addition, they facilitate the skimming process for busy readers. Like headings, list items should be phrased in parallel form. You might also consider multilevel lists, with subentries below each major item (much like an outline).

Previews and Reviews

You may have heard the old saying “tell’em what you’re going to tell’em; then tell ‘em what you just told’em.” The more formal way of giving this advice is to tell you to use preview sections before and review sections after important material in your report. Using preview section to introduce a topic helps readers get ready for new information. Previews are particularly helpful when the information is complex or unexpected. You don’t want the reader to get halfway into a section before figuring out what it’s all about.

Review sections, obviously enough, come after a body of material and summarize the information for your readers. Summaries that come at the end of chapters in some textbooks are review sections. Long reports and reports dealing with complex subjects can often benefit from multiple review sections, and not just a single review at the very end.

The Ending

Research shows that the ending, the final section of a report, leaves strong and lasting impression. That's why it's important to use the ending to emphasize the main points of your message. In a report written in direct order you may want to remind readers of your key points or your conclusions and recommendations. If your report is written in indirect order, end with conclusions and recommendations. If your report is written in indirect order, end with a summary of key points (except in short memos). In analytical reports, end with conclusions and recommendations as well as key points. Be sure to summarize the benefits to the reader in any report that suggests a change of course or some other action. In general, the ending ties up all the pieces and reminds readers how those pieces fit together. It provides a final opportunity to emphasize the wholeness of your message. Furthermore, it gives you one last chance to check what you really wanted to say.

Organizational Plan For Short Informal Reports

A. Format

1. For brief external reports, use letter format, including a title or a subject line after the reader's address that clearly states the subject of the document.
2. For brief internal reports, use memo or manuscript format.
3. Present all short informal reports properly.
 - a. Single-space the text.
 - b. Double-space between paragraphs.
 - c. Use headings where helpful, but try not to use more than three levels of headings.
 - d. Call attention to significant information by setting it off visually with lists or indentation.
 - e. Include visual aids to emphasize and clarify the text.(plan)

Organizational Plan For Short Informal Reports

B. Opening

1. For short, routine memos, use the subject line of the memo form and the first sentence or two of the text as the introduction.
2. For all other short reports, cover these topics in the introduction: purpose, scope, background, restrictions (in conducting the study), sources of information and methods of research, and organization of the report.
3. If using direct order, place conclusions and recommendations in the opening.(body)

C. Body (Findings and Supporting Details)

1. Use direct order for informational reports to receptive readers, developing idea around subtopics (chronologically, geographically, categorically).
2. Use direct order for analytical reports to receptive readers, developing points around conclusions or recommendations.
3. Use indirect order for analytical reports to skeptical or hostile readers, developing points around logical arguments.
4. Use an appropriate writing style.
 - a. Use an informal style (I and you) for letter and memo reports, unless company custom calls for the impersonal third person.
 - b. Use an impersonal style for more formal short reports.
5. Maintain a consistent time frame by writing in either the present or the past tense, using other tenses only to indicate prior or future events.
6. Give each paragraph a topic sentence.
7. Link paragraphs by using transitional words and phrases.
8. Strive for readability by using short sentences, concrete words, and terminology that is appropriate for your readers.
9. Be accurate, thorough, and impartial in presenting the material.
10. Avoid including irrelevant and unnecessary details.
11. Include documentation for all material quoted or paraphrased from secondary sources, using a consistent format.(closing)

D. Ending

1. In informational reports summarize major findings at the end, if you wish.
2. Summarize points in the same order in which they appear in the text.
3. In analytical reports using indirect order, list conclusions and recommendations at the end.
4. Be certain that conclusions and recommendations follow logically from facts presented in the text.
5. Consider using a list format for emphasis.
6. Avoid introducing new material in the summary, conclusions, or recommendations.(model report)

Model Business ReportsReport on the Low Admission Rate in a newly opened branch of a school

October 10, 2006

The Principal,
The School, Main Branch,
Lahore.

Dear Madam,

Subject: Causes of Low Admission Rate

This report is in response to your directive No. 123 September 20 which demands certain reasons of very poor admission rate in this branch. My findings are given below:

- I. The location of our School building is not ideal.
- II. The building itself is very old.
- III. It does not appeal the visitors.
- IV. We had been facing the problem of permanent faculty because direct conveyance is yet not available.
- V. Parents lodged several complaints against the management, but we could not help it.

Considering these problems, I propose that:

1. The building of the school should be shifted to a main road.
2. Permanent faculty should be appointed.

Yours sincerely,

A Report On Slow Sales and Rising Complaints

TO: Rana Abid, Vice President of Marketing
FROM: Bashir Ahmad, National Sales Manager
DATE: September 12, 2006
SUBJECT: Major accounts sales problems

INTRODUCTION

This report outlines the results of my investigation into the recent slowdown in sales and the accompanying rise in sales-and service-related complaints from some of our largest customers.

As we discussed at last quarter's management meeting, major account sales dropped 12 percent over the last four quarters, whereas overall sales were up 7 percent. During the same time, we have noticed an increase in both formal and informal complaints from larger customers regarding how confusing and complicated it has become to do business with us.

My investigation started with in-depth discussions with the four regional sales managers, first as a group and then individually. The tension felt in the initial meeting eventually bubbled to the surface during my meetings with each manager. Staff members in each region are convinced that other regions are booking orders they don't deserve, with one region doing all the legwork only to see another region get credited with the sale and, naturally, the commission and quota credit.

I followed up the sales manager's discussions with informal talks and e-mail exchanges with several sales reps from each region. Virtually everyone who is involved with our major national accounts has a story to share. No one is happy with the situation, and I sense that some reps are walking away from major customers because the process is so frustrating.

Organizational Issues

When we divided the national sales force into four geographical regions last year, the idea was to focus our sales efforts and clarify responsibilities for each prospective and current customer. The regional managers have got to know their market territories very well, and sales have increased beyond even our most optimistic projections.

Unfortunately, while solving one problem, we seem to have created another. In the past 12 to 18 months, several regional customers have grown to national statuses. In addition, a few national retailers have taken on (or expressed interest in) our products. As a result, a significant portion of both our current sales and our future opportunities lie with these large national accounts.

I uncovered more than a dozen cases in which sales reps from two or more regions found themselves competing with each other by pursuing the same customer from different locations.

Moreover, the complaints from our major accounts about overlapping or nonexistent account coverage are a direct result of the regional organization.

Recommendations

In the light of the above findings I recommend:

- (i) Areas may be reallocated.
- (ii) A coordination cell may be set up in the head office to monitor the working of these regional offices.
- (iii) A bulletin giving area wise sales achievements of every region may be circulated.

If there is anything else you would like to know, please call me.

Yours truly,

BUSINESS REPORTSParts of a Formal Report

A formal reports manuscript format and impersonal tone convey an impression of professionalism. A format report can be either short (fewer than 10 pages) or long (10 pages or more). It is informational or analytical, direct or indirect. It may be targeted to readers inside or outside the organization.

There are three basic divisions of a formal report:

1. Prefatory Parts
 2. Text Parts
 3. Supplementary Parts
1. Prefatory Parts are:
- a) Cover
 - b) Title fly
 - c) Letter of authorization
 - d) Letter of acceptance
 - e) Letter of transmittal
 - f) Table of contents
 - g) List of illustrations
 - h) Synopsis or executive summary
2. Text Parts
- a) Introduction
 - b) Body
 - c) Summary
 - d) Conclusions
 - e) Recommendations
 - f) Notes
3. Supplementary Parts
- a) Appendixes
 - b) Bibliography
 - c) Index

Prefatory PartsCover

Use a cover only for long reports. Use a sturdy, plain, light cardboard with good page fasteners. With the cover on, the open pages should remain flat. Center the report title and your name four or five inches from the upper edge.

Title Fly

It is a plain sheet of paper with the title of the report on it.

Title Page

1. the title of the report
2. the name, title and address of the person group that authorized the report prepared for submitted to
3. the name, title and address of the person, group etc that prepared the report, prepared by, submitted by
4. the date on which the report was submitted.

The title page signals the readers by giving the report title, author's name, name of person or organization to whom the report is addressed, and date of submission. Choose title information but not long, A Report of, A Study of, or A Survey of

Your title promises what your report will deliver by stating the report's purpose and content. A title in order to be effective must be clear, accurate, comprehensive, specific, concise and appropriately phrases.

Place of Title Page Items

Do not number your title page, but count it as page (I) of your prefatory pages. Centre the title horizontally on the page, three to four inches below the upper edge, using all capital letters. If the title is longer than six or eight words, centre it on two or more lines.

Letter of Authorization and Letter of Acceptance

If you received written authorization (a letter or memo) you may want to include. It usually has direct request plan. Letter of Acceptance (or memo of acceptance) acknowledges the assignment. It follows good- news plan confirming time and money restriction and other pertinent detail. This letter is rarely included in report.

Letter of Transmittal (or memo of transmittal)

It conveys your report to the audience. It says what you'd say if you were handing the report to the person who authorized you. It has less formal tone.

Depending on the situation, your letter might:

- Acknowledge those who helped with the report
- Refer readers to sections of special interest
- Discuss the need and approaches for follow-up investigations
- Suggest some special uses of the information
- Urge the reader to take immediate action
- Use good news plan

Table of Contents

This table outlines the text and list Prefatory Parts

1. List preliminary items (transmittal letter, abstract) in your table of contents, numbering the pages with small roman numerals. (List items that appear at the end of the report, such as glossary, appendix, notes and bibliography section; number these pages with Arabic numerals, continuing the page sequence of the report proper, where page no. 1 list the first page of your report text.
2. Include no heading in the table of contents not listed as headings or subheadings in the report; your report text may, however, contain certain sub-headings.
3. Use different types of styles and indentations to show the various levels of heads.

List of Illustrations

For simplicity sake, some reports prefer to include all visual aid as illustration or exhibits.

Put the list of figures and table on separate page if they won't fit on one page with the table of content.

Synopsis or Executive Summary

A synopsis is a brief overview (one page or less) of report's most important point. It is also called abstract. Executive summary is a fully developed mini version of the report and is comprehensive.

1. Make your summary able to stand alone in meaning – a mini-report
2. Make it intelligible to the general reader. Readers of summaries will vary widely in expertise, perhaps much more than those who read the report itself. So translate all technical data into plain English.
3. Add no new information. Simply summarize the report
4. Stick to the order of your report
5. Emphasize only major points.

Text of the Report

Introduction

It has a number of functions and covers a wide variety of topics and helps the reader follow and understands information.

Body

The section contain information that supports conclusion and recommendation as well as analysis, logic, interpretation of the information.

Closing

You summarize the main idea of your report highlighting your conclusion or recommendation and list any course of action. In long report this section may be labeled Summary, Conclusion & Recommendation.

Supplementary PartsAppendix/Appendixes

They contain material related to the report but not included in the text because they were lengthy or not directly relevant. They include:

1. Statistics or measurements
2. Maps
3. Complex formulas
4. Long quotations
5. Photographs
6. Related correspondence (letters of inquiry etc.)
7. Texts of law, regulations etc.

Bibliography

A bibliography is a list of source materials on a particular subject. In a formal report it shows what books and other library materials were consulted and it includes all the works mentioned in the footnotes. As part of the reference matter, it follows the appendix or appendices.

Index

An index is an alphabetical list of names, places and subjects mentioned in the report, along with the page on which they occur. They are rarely included in unpublished reports.

MARKET REPORTS

The place where we go to buy or sell commodities is commonly known as market. Technically speaking, market is not a place or bazaar where we go to buy or sell, but it is indeed a contact of buyer and seller. The world has become a global village making buying and selling possible without going anywhere. Information Technology has mainly played its part in doing so.

Prof. Chapman says while defining the market that it refers not a place but to a commodity or commodities and buyers and sellers of the same who are in direct competition with one another. We can name these as Rice Market, Wheat Market, Yarn Market, Fruit Market, etc.

How Market Works

1. The operations of transferring goods or services from the producers to the consumers can also be considered as marketing operations, though the market basically determines the price.
2. The term Marketing also deals with providing facilities to producers and consumers.
3. It also creates place, time and possession utilities.
4. To make the things easier, Market can be divided into different sections. Each section deals in only one commodity.
5. Sale is done by sampling. Experts supervise this sale. This system saves time and money.
6. Buyers and sellers have their own representatives in the market known as brokers, agents, dealers, etc. They have got an important role to play in the market. They reach and provide the commodities to buyers and sellers. They receive commission for their services.
7. Some buyers and sellers make "Future planning to earn profit. They make contracts of buying and selling in future. They neither make delivery nor pay the price until the promised period. They earn, expecting a rise or fall in price.
8. By using Information Technology, the trader is able to compete from one corner of the world to the other in a very short time.
9. Experts prepare bulletins and market-reports for commercial information and publish them daily, weekly, monthly or annually.

Newspapers, Television, Radio and Internet are also used for this purpose.

Classification of Markets

We can classify markets in different ways:

- 1) Markets may be classified in respect of ownership or area of operation.
- 2) Based on the volume of transactions markets may be classified into wholesale and retail.
- 3) Based on the things bought and sold, we have
 - (a) commodity and (b) capital market.

Commodity Market

Raw materials or manufactured products are dealt as commodities. Every commodity has a different method of its sale depending upon its nature. The nature of commodity also affects the process of delivery in commodity market. Different commodities have different methods of delivery.

Raw agricultural and mineral produces are dealt in the produce exchange market which is scientifically organized commodity market.

Manufactured or semi-manufactured commodities are dealt in the Manufactured Goods Market.

Precious materials like gold, silver, etc. are dealt in the Bullion Market. These markets work only in specific areas of the world.

Capital Market

The capital Market fulfills the requirements of capital for industrial and commercial organizations. Capital is the backbone of an industry. We first need capital to start an industry and then to run it.

The capital market can further be divided into three sections.

(1) Money Market (2) The Foreign Exchange Market and (3) The Stock Exchange Market.

1. The money market only deals with short-term loans. It finances the existing business operations. The funds of the public are invested to gain profits. Bank is used as agent. Through this agent industrial and business organizations are lent. Then again this agent is used to receive the money.
2. The foreign exchange market mainly deals with the buying and selling of foreign currencies. It is a very specific market. It has got a key role to play in the import export trade.
3. The stock exchange market is a well organized market which is helpful in buying and selling of stocks and shares of many industrial and commercial organizations. The expansion of this market is directly related to the expansion of industrial and commercial concerns.

Wholesale Market

When commodities are supplied directly to dealers, it is known as a wholesale market.

Retail Market

When commodities are sold directly to consumers, it is known as a Retail Market.

Market Report

Definition

A market report describes the condition of a commodity in the market on a certain date for a specific period. It points out the business conditions in a market at a given time.

Market Report may be of a day, a week, a month, a year or even a number of years.

Daily Market Report shows the price of goods on a mentioned date. It also describes the closing rates of the previous day, the opening rates of that day, the highest and the lowest rates and the demand and supply of the commodities on that particular day.

Daily newspapers, television, radio and internet give this information. Consumers take more interest in daily market report than traders.

Weekly Market Report gives the condition of the commodities for the past six days. It contains closing rates of the last week, the opening rates of that week, the highest and lowest rates and the closing rates of that week. This report also determines the causes of variation in price and the expected price movement in the coming week. Business communities show a keen interest in such reports.

Monthly Market Report is an analysis of business done during the whole month. These reports are prepared for comparatively stable market and a permanent demand. This report describes the closing rate of the commodities in the previous month, the opening rate of the month, highest and lowest and closing rate of the month. Newspapers, trade journals and monthly bulletins publish these reports.

Value of Reading a Market Report

The Market Report makes us aware of the volume and nature of business in the market. Traders become aware of different conditions of the market. They can know something about the demand and supply of a commodity.

Market Reports help people guess the future movements of price. The market condition is exposed to everybody as a result of which prices become stable. These prices can be compared at different markets.

Qualities Of A Good Market Report

A person writing a Market Report should have a comprehensive knowledge of the matter that has to be reported. He must always keep in mind the following points.

1. Normally a Market Report is not personal. It should be written using third person and the past tense.
2. General readers should be able to understand the technical terms used in the report.
3. Words should be used economically. Unnecessary details must be avoided. It should not be so short that misses the essential information.
4. There should be a good analysis of changes of prices and demand and supply relationship.
5. Market Report should be based upon the facts. Events should be written in the minute details. Any writer of Market Report should be unbiased while concluding his report.

How to read a Market Report

To comprehend a Market Report fully, it is necessary to read it carefully. Sometimes even an educated person faces difficulties to understand it. More practice is required to understand a market report. One should specially note the nature of report (daily, weekly, monthly or annual) the nature of commodity, volume of business and the trend of the market.

How to explain a Market Report

Sometimes a market report is reproduced and sometimes it is explained. While reproducing a Market Report technical terms should concentrate on the given matter. Do not try to add or omit something.

While explaining a Market Report try to extract the hidden meaning. First of all explain all the technical terms separately, then mention the price clearly.

After following the above instructions explain the subject matter (of the report) clearly.

Model Market ReportsA Report On Karachi Cotton Market*Cotton Easy Amid Thin Trading

Karachi: The cotton market failed to maintain a firm posture on Monday as spinners showed reluctance to chase the rising prices. However, needy spinners continued to pick up quality lots at Rs 2000 level. The official spot rate was marked up by Rs 20 at Rs 2000.

Cotton prices moved up to Rs 2050 level on Saturday owing to spinners' fear that lint supply would be interrupted during elections and ginner/ growers' strong resistance to decline in lint prices. There seemed to be an unwritten agreement between ginner and growers to make joint efforts to stave off the threat of price decline. Hence despite the spinners' reluctance to pay higher asking prices, the ginner maintained a firm posture. As a result the needy spinners picked up stray lots of quality lint at Rs 2000. Some low quality stuff, however, changed hands at Rs 1925.

Most of the spinners remained glued to the side lines as they did not consider it feasible to lift at the prevailing prices in view of uncertain outlook of the international yarn market. The current prices are understood to be well above world parity. It remains to be seen whether ginner are able to hold the price line when odds are in favour of buyers.

Stock Exchange Report

The KSE 100-share index managed to finish above the coveted level of 2,000 points after four previous abortive bids, indicating that it could maintain its forward thrust in the coming weeks also, boosted by some positive corporate developments.

Above the market dividend and bonus shares pouring in each day have altogether changed the investor's future perceptions about the size of capital gains and price appreciation on selected counters and no one is inclined to miss the rising market at this stage.

The interesting feature were the massively battered genuine investors who abhorred to re-enter market but were claimed to have resumed their covering purchases on low-priced blue chips, lured apparently by the bait of high dividends. An accelerated pace of sell-off of the state-owned units and higher dividend announcements by most of the leading companies continued to inspire strong short covering from all quarters, signaling the market is heading to establish new records, both in terms of price flare-ups and trading volumes.

The bull mood to stay above the 2,000 point index level is well – manifested in investors' perception who were not weighed down by the Wednesday's terrorist killing in the city and behaved orderly.

A Report on An Export – Marketing

Strategy for the Defence Industry

The global defence market has many players competing for contracts. The United States leads the pack with a 55 per cent market share. Russia and the European industrial countries account for most of the other 45 per cent. In recent years, however, a number of countries in the Asian-African region, whose defence-manufacturing base is large, have begun to enter the market as emerging defence exporters, or EDEs.

Pakistan, which has a growing and increasingly sophisticated defence industry, is one such EDE. Its defence industry now has the technical expertise and production capability to grow into a $ 2 billion to $ 3 billion a year export industry over the next five years. This, however, will require a sustained and well thought out marketing strategy and a continuing emphasis on product improvement. During the last two decades defence spending has been on the rise in Asia. During 1980-90 defence spending in Asia grew at over 40 per cent. During 1990-2000 it grew by 26 per cent, whereas, during the same period, it dropped by 11 percent globally. It is still on the rise in Asia. In 2000, amongst the world's top defence-spenders were: Japan (4th), China (8th), India (11th), and South Korea (13th).

In the 1990s Central Asia's defence spending grew by 21 per cent to $ 2.4 billion a year, Eastern Asia's by 21 per cent to $ 96 billion a year, and South Asia's by 50 per cent to $ 15 billion a year, while Oceania's defence spending remained nearly steady at $ 7.3 billion a year.

How do emerging defence exporters like Pakistan penetrate into the export market and increase their market share?

Suggestion

To penetrate into traditional markets, Pakistan should focus on non-traditional products. There is a fairly large range of these, including services, combat equipment, etc. There is a $10 billion to $15 billion a year market for sporting arms, ammunition, equipment, boots, tents, global positioning systems sets, binoculars, rifles, etc. these are closely aligned with military products, but with lower specifications. Expanding into this sector would energise private-sector defence industries and draw them into the mainstream of defence exports.

World Commodity Reports

World Oil Report

Oil prices were threatened on the first anniversary of the September 11, 2001 attack and the prospect of a US military invasion on Iraq. Consequently the prices rose. In London, the price of Brent oil rose above $29 a barrel briefly on September 10, for the first time in almost a year. But prices fell towards the week-end. In New York, October dated light sweet crude futures traded at $29.20 from $29.72 a week earlier.

The US energy department meanwhile reported that the crude oil stocks fell 5.3 million barrels, or 1.8 per cent, to 293.2 million in the week ended September 6 from the previous week. Gasoline stocks declined 300, 000 barrels to 205.6 million, while the distillate fuel inventories increased by 4 million barrels to 133.6 million.

At a recent meeting, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to maintain severe restraints on oil production for the fourth quarter to keep crude prices from rising.

Opec left supply limits on hold despite worries among consumer nations about the impact of high energy costs on the world economy. After a meeting in Japan on September 19, Opec said that it would maintain oil production for rest of 2002 at 21.7 million barrels per day, aimed at maintaining a price bank of $22 to $28 a barrel.

Opec cutbacks, in place since January, have combined with the threat of a US war against Iraq to push the benchmark US crude close to $30 a barrel – a setback for the industrialized powers trying to sustain a shaky economic recovery.

In early December producers will meet to review policy for the first quarter of next year, by which time any US plans for military action may be clearer.

An existing Opec formula, adding more oil if prices stay above $28 for the basket, equivalent to about $30.50 for the US crude, for 20 consecutive trading days, could provide the trigger for more oil, said the UAE oil minister.

Within the fuel demand rising ahead of the northern hemisphere winter, and the United States pressing the case against Iraq, fuel bills may quickly come under furthered pressure.

World Gold Report

Dominated by the concerns of terrorist attacks on the first anniversary of September 11 and the prospect of a war on Iraq, gold prices had a volatile week ended September 14.

By September 13, gold was fixed at $318.85 an ounce on the London Bullion market against $319.25 the previous week.

World Coffee Report

Coffee prices extended recent gains, pushing up to new one year high points on technical factors and speculation of a possible reduction in forecasts of the size of the 2002-03 crop.

On LIFFE, the Robusta quality for November delivery climbed to $533 the previous week. On New York's CSCE market, the Arabica for December delivery rose to 56.70 cents the previous week.

World Cocoa Report

Cocoa prices have more than doubled in the past two years. More recently they were bolstered by the prospect that this year's crop will be insufficient to meet demand for the third year running. Prices continue to be supported largely by commercial buying.

Market Terms1. ARBITRAGE

Different prices may exist in different markets for the same commodity at the same time. A business operator takes advantage of difference of prices and buys from the market where price is low and sells in a market where price is high. By this difference of prices he earns profit.

His profit mainly depends on two major factors.

- a) Updated knowledge of prices prevailing in the market.
 - b) Quick transport from the place of buying to the place of selling.
- Arbitrage is quite common in stock Exchange market where dealers deal in securities and earn profit by the existing difference of prices.

2. ARRIVAL

Fresh stock that is brought to the market in a given period of time is called arrival. This does not include the old stock or stock on balance in hand.

Arrivals show increase in the commodities and help determine business trend in the market as well as the price in future. Therefore, large arrivals indicate rise in prices. Since it is an important feature of market, it is generally quoted in market reports.

3. BEAR

A stock exchange term derived from traditional bear hunting, where the trapper would make sure of his market for the SKINS before setting out to shoot the bears.

A bear is a speculator who sells at present the commodity/securities hoping that prices will fall in future and he may earn profit by the difference of prices.

He sells commodities/securities that he has yet to buy. He sells at present when the price is high and buys in future when the price falls. This difference of prices makes his profit.

When his speculations are proved wrong, he suffers loss because he has already sold securities and buys in future at higher rates.

4. BULL

The term is related to bull activity. His lifting the prey is related to rise in prices that a bull speculates. Bull is a dealer on stock exchange, buys securities at present on existing prices. He speculates rise in prices in future. He retains securities till the time when there is rise in prices. He sells in future at higher rates and earns profit by the difference of prices.

When his speculations are proved wrong, unlike bear he has a chance of manipulating prices in his favour and launches Bull Campaign. So that he may not suffer loss.

Note: Both Bull and Bear help setting buying or selling trend in the market.

5. BEARISH

When there is a general expectation of fall of prices in future, Every Bear invests money in making selling contracts. They set a selling trend in the market and due to competition among bears the price level falls and the market becomes BEARISH

The bearish market reduces the profit margin and business operators face difficulty in making high profits.

6. BULLISH

When there is a general expectation of rise in prices in future, every bull invests money in buying securities/commodities. This way, they set a buying trend in the market and face competition with other bulls. This causes general rise in prices in the market, and the market is called Bullish.

The bullish market increases the profit margins and sellers earn huge profits.

The most notorious of all bull markets was the SOUTH SEA BUBBLE, which burst in 1720 and set the growth of a credit economy in the U.K.

7. BEAR COVERING

When bear's speculations are proved wrong and the expected prices do not fall at the time of buying, the bear is compelled to buy goods to fulfil his promises and obligations. The purchase made by the bear under such conditions is called as Bear Covering.

This happens due to rise in demand and subsequently the price level goes up.

8. BULL CAMPAIGN

When bulls' speculations are proved wrong and the expected prices do not rise rather they fall, a number of bulls organize themselves to manipulate prices in their favour. They create demand by spreading RUMOURS in the market in order to establish buying trend. The campaign launched by the bulls is called BULL CAMPAIGN.

9. RIGGING

When bulls' expectations are proved wrong and the expected prices do not rise rather they fall, he tries to manipulate prices in their favour by bogus transactions. This activity is called as RIGGING.

He does so with the help of his workers, principals and agents.

10. SQUARE DEAL

The sale by the bulls and the purchase by the bears to settle their respective accounts is called as SQUARE DEAL.

This is generally done to finalise the transactions and close the necessary accounts.

11. HEDGING

A trader buying forward or selling forward in the commodity exchanges may hedge to protect himself from losses arising from variations in pricing. He may also pass on some of his forward sales to the shoulders of others. He does so to save his skin and the activity is known as HEDGING.

12. STAG

Stag is a person who buys heavily on a new issue of stocks or shares and expects that price will rise very quickly; and he will earn profit.

He normally holds shares only for a short time.

13. DEMURRAGE

The daily charge made for detention of a ship beyond the agreed number of LAY DAYS, is called Demurrage.

The term is also used for the daily charge made for detention of railway rolling stock.

14. DUMPING

In the modern age of industrialization and economic development, every country is anxious to capture foreign market for her own product.

This may be done, when the first country wishes to sell at a low profit or even at a loss, so that it may get hold of the market of the second country. The first country may set monopolistic control and start earning profit. This activity is known as DUMPING.

15. EX-FACTORY

Ex-factory sale is done outside the factory and the delivery of goods takes place at seller's warehouse or godown.

The price is generally determined by the following formula. $\text{COST} + \text{Direct Expenses} + \text{Owner's Profit} + \text{Dealer's Commission} = \text{Whole sale Price}$.

16. EX-SHIP

If the delivery is taken by the buyer at the dock after paying all cost for their conveyance home, the sale is called EX-SHIP.

The seller's responsibility ceases as soon as the goods leave the dock. If barges (boats) are necessary the buyer must provide them.

17. LAME DUCK OF THE MARKET

'Lame duck' is applied to companies which need to be saved from complete ruin and this is done with the help of public funds.

'Lame Ducks' are often hidden under the cloak of nationalized industries, to which normal standard of efficiency cannot be applied.

18. GLUT

An excessive supply of any commodity is known as Glut.

Excess of goods in the market makes the process of selling difficult and reduces the profit margin. If the situation persists for a longer period, the market becomes stagnant.

19. PEGGLING

When the rate is artificially maintained at certain level mainly by manipulation of prices. It is called pegging operation.

Pegging is generally done by the bulls to maintain price level and save themselves from loss.

20. CLOGGING

It is a situation when the market is saturated with surplus funds which obstruct the normal operation of business.

This situation results in increased circulation of money within the country, and causes inflation.

21. STRADING

When the market operators take advantage of abnormal differences in the rates of different bills in the same market and carry on ARBITRAGE operation by selling one kind of bills to buy another kind of bills, the operation is called STRADING.

22. BLUE CHIPS

Ordinary shares which are of the highest standing considered to be so safe that there is no risk of losing either capital or income, are called Blue Chips.

They are usually the shares of particularly well-known and sound companies.

23. STREET PRICE

When the stock exchange is closed, the selling of securities is done outside the exchange at a privately quoted price. This is known as street price.

The seller's main objective is to dispose of his goods whose quality is not guaranteed. Some times he needs a license for his business.

24. MARKET PRICE

The market price is the price which is actually paid in the current market dealings. It also indicates the price of every unit of commodity. (i.e., per unit price).

The price of a commodity is determined by two factors i.e., 1, demand 2, supply.

Writing Resumes & Application LettersPreparing Resumes

Send your messages such as resumes, application letters, job inquiries, and follow-up letter.

Sending out such employment messages, you have an opportunity to showcase your communication skills – skills valued highly by the majority of employers. In fact, your success in finding a job will depend on how carefully you plan, write, and complete your resume.

Analyze your purpose and audience

_____A resume is a structured, written summary of a person's education, employment background, and job qualifications. Resume is a form of advertising. It is intended to stimulate an employer's interest in your.

A successful resume inspires a prospective employer to invite you to interview with the company. Thus, your purpose to create interest – not to tell readers everything about you. In fact, it may be best to only hint at some things.

Fallacy	Fact
Don't think of a resume is to list all your skills and abilities	A resume will kindle employer interest and generate an interview
Get you the job you want	Get you in the door
Read carefully and thoroughly by an interested employer	In fact your resume probably has less than 45 seconds to make an impression.

Investigate pertinent information

Include pertinent personal history. The specific dates, duties, and accomplishments of any previous jobs you've held. Collect every piece of relevant educational experience that adds to your qualifications, such as formal degrees, skills, certificates, academic awards, or scholarships.

Information about personal endeavors: dates of your membership in an association, offices you may have held in a club or professional organization? Presentations you might have given to a community group.

Adapt your resume to your Audience

Because your resume will have little time to make an impression, be sure to adopt a "you" attitude and think about your resume from the employers perspective. Ask yourself: What key qualifications will this employer be looking for? Which of these qualifications are your greatest strengths? What quality would set you apart from other candidates in the eyes of a potential employer. What are three or four of your greatest accomplishments, and what resulted from these accomplishments?

A Good Resume

A good resume is a flexible and can be customized for various situations and employers.
Seven Qualities that Employer Seek

1. think in term of result
2. know how to get things done
3. are well rounded,
4. show signs of progress
5. have personal standards of excellence
6. are flexible and willing to try new things
7. possess strong communication skills.

7. possess strong communication skills.

Appropriate Organizational Approach

To focus attention on your strongest points, adopt the appropriate organizational approach – make your resume chronological, functional, or a combination of the two. The "right" choice depends on your background and your goals.

The Chronological Resume

In a chronological resume, the work-experience section dominates, immediately after the name and address and the objective. You develop this section by listing your jobs sequentially in reverse order, beginning with the most recent position and working backward toward earlier jobs. Under each listing, describe your responsibility and accomplishments, giving the most space to the most recent positions. If you're just graduating from college, you can vary this chronological approach by putting your educational qualifications before your experience, thereby focusing attention on your academic credentials.

The chronological approach is the most common way to organize a resume, and many employers prefer it.

This approach has three key advantages:

- (1) Employers are familiar with it & can easily find information
- (2) it highlights growth and career progression
- (3) it highlights employment continuity and stability

The chronological approach is especially appropriate if you have a strong employment history and are aiming for a job that builds on your current career path.

- (1) Employers are familiar with it & can easily find information
- (2) it highlights growth and career progression
- (3) it highlights employment continuity and stability

The chronological approach is especially appropriate if you have a strong employment history and are aiming for a job that builds on your current career path.

(Example)

June 2006 to present

Chief Accountant / Financial Analyst. AZ Corporation

- Prepare accounting reports for wholesale giftware importer (Rs75 million annual sales)
- Audit financial transactions with suppliers in 12 Latin American countries
- Created a computerized model to adjust account for fluctuations in currency exchange rates.
- Negotiated joint-venture agreements with major suppliers in Mexico and Colombia
- Implemented electronic funds transfer for vendor disbursements, improving cash flow and eliminating payables clerk position.

The Functional Resume

A functional resume emphasizes a list of skills and accomplishments, identifying employers and academic experience in subordinate sections. This pattern stresses individual areas of competence, so it's useful for people who are just entering the job market, want to redirect their careers, or have little continuous career-related experience.

Advantages

- (1) without having to read through job descriptions, employers can see what you can do for them,
- (2) you can emphasize earlier job experience,
- (3) you can de-emphasize any lack of career progress or lengthy unemployment.

(Example)

Relevant Skills

Personal Selling/Retailing

- Led house wares department in employee sales for spring 2006.
- Created end-cap and shelf displays for special housewares promotions.
- Sold the most benefit tickets during college fund-raising drive for local community center

Public Interaction

- Commended by housewares manager for resolving customer complaints amicably
- Was captain college xi and participated in many University Fixture.

Managing

- Training part-time housewares employees in cash register operation and customer service
- Reworked housewares employee schedules as assistant manager
- Organized summer activities for children 6-12 years old for city of Karachi – including reading programs, sports activities, etc.

The Combination Resume

A combination resume includes the best features of the chronological and functional approaches. Nevertheless, it is not commonly used, and it has two major disadvantages:

- (1) it tends to be longer, and
- (2) it can be repetitious if you have to list your accomplishments and skills in both the functional section and the chronological job descriptions.

Write your resume using a simple and direct style. Use short, crisp phrases instead of whole sentences, and focus on what your reader needs to know. Avoid using the word I. instead, start your phrases with impressive action verbs such as these:

Accomplished	coordinated	initiated	participated	set up
Achieved	created	installed	performed	simplified
Administered	demonstrated	introduced	planned	sparked
Approved	developed	investigated	presented	streamlined
Arranged	directed	joined	propose	strengthened
Assisted	established	launched	raised	succeeded
Assumed	explored	maintained	recommended	supervised

VU

Budgeted	forecasted	managed	reduced	systematized
Chaired	generated	motivated	reorganized	targeted
Changed	identified	operated	resolved	trained
Complied	implemented	organized	saved	transformed
Completed	improved	oversaw	served	(avoid using weak statements)

Avoid Weak Statements

Responsible for developing a new branch

Say: Developed a new branch

I was in charge of customer complaints

Handled all customer complaints

Won a cash prize of 100,000 for opening the most new customer accounts in my department

Generated the highest number of new customer accounts in my department

Use active statement

That show results

In addition to listing your accomplishments, include your name and address, academic credentials, employment history, activities and achievement, and relevant personal data.

Name and address

Name: an employer needs to know who you are

where you can be reached: phone number/ e-mail address contact information at school and at home both. cell phone.

No need to include the word resume. Just make sure the reader can tell in an instant who you are and how to communicate with you.

(Career Objective or Summary of Qualification)

Career Objective or Summary of Qualification

Experts disagree about the need to state a career objective.

such a statement only limits you as a candidate (especially for a variety of openings).

employers will try to categorize you anyway, so you might as well make sure they attach the right label.

Remember, your goal is to generate interest immediately. If you decide to state your objective, make effective by being as specific as possible about what you want:

(example Career Objective or Summary of Qualification)

A marketing position in a growing company requiring international education .

Summary of qualifications: ten years of experience in international banking with track record.

The career objective or summary may be the only section read fully by the employer, so if you include either one, make it strong, concise, and convincing.

(Education)

Still in school, education is probably your strongest selling point.

Present your educational background in depth, choosing facts that support your “theme”.

Give heading such as “Education”, “Professional College Training”, or “Academic Preparation”.

Starting with most recently attended, list the name and location of each one, the term of your enrollment (in months and years), your major and minor fields of study, significant skills and abilities you've developed in your course work, and the degrees or certificates you've earned.

Indicate incomplete education

Any training qualifying you for the job.Scholarship,award

Include training sponsored by business or government.

Include any relevant seminars or workshop you've attended, as well as the certificates or other documents you've receive.

Listing your grades depends on the job you want and the quality of your grades.

Education is usually given less emphasis if you've worked in your chosen field for a year or more.

(Work Experience, Skills & Accomplishments)

List the education section, the work-experience section focuses on your overall theme.

Show relationship between your previous responsibilities and your target field.

Call attention to skills you've developed and your progression from jobs of lesser to greater responsibility.

Describing your work experience, list your jobs in chronological order,

Include any part-time, even if unrelated to your current career objective. It shows your ability to get and hold a job – an important qualification in itself. If you have worked your way through school, say so.

Employers interpret this as a sign of character.

Work Experience, Skills & Accomplishments

Before or after each job listing, state your functional title, such as 'salesperson'. Don't try to make your role seem more important by glamorizing your job title.

The work experience section lists all the related job you've had:

- Name and location of employer
- What the organization does (if not clear from its name)
- Your functional title
- How long you worked
- Your duties and responsibilities
- Your significant achievements or contributions.
- (example)

Developed a new filing system that reduced paperwork by 50 percent.

Include miscellaneous facts that are related to your career objective:

- Command of other languages
- Computer expertise
- Date you can start working

You may put "References available upon request" at the end of your resume, but doing so is not necessary; the availability of references is usually assumed. Don't include actual names of references. List your references on a separate and take them to your interview.

Activities and Achievements

Describe any volunteer activities that demonstrate your abilities.

List projects that require leadership, organization, teamwork, and cooperation.

Emphasize career-related activities such as "member of the Student Marketing Association."

List skills you learned in these activities, and explain how these skills are related to the job you're applying for.

Include speaking/writing/tutoring experience/participation in athletics/creative projects/fundraising/community-service activities in academic or professional organizations. Non-paid activities may provide evidence of work-related skills.

Resume Deception

One in four resumes has a lie in it.

The most frequent forms of deception include the following:

- Claiming nonexistent educational credits.
- Inflating grade-point averages.
- Stretching dates of employment to cover gaps.
- Claiming to be self-employed
- Claiming to have worked for companies that are out of business
- Omitting jobs that might cause embarrassment.
- Exaggerating expertise or experience

Personal Data

Leave personal interest off your resume-unless including them enhances the employer's understanding of why you would be the best candidate for the job.

Experts also recommend excluding salary information, reasons for leaving jobs, names, of previous supervisor etc

Revise your Resume

The key to writing a successful resume

Adopt the "you" attitude and focus on your audience.

Think about what the prospective employer need, and then tailor your resume accordingly.

Common problems of resumes:

The "perfect" resume responds to the reader's needs and preferences and avoids some common faults.

Too long: The resume is not concise, relevant, and to the point.

To short or sketchy. The resume does not give enough information for a proper evaluation of the application

Hard to read. A lack of "white space" and of deceives such as indentions and boldfacing makes the reader's job more difficult.

Wordy. Descriptions are verbose, with numerous words used for what could be said more simply.

Too slick. The resume appears to have been written by someone other than the applicant, which raises the question of whether the qualifications have been exaggerated.

Amateurish. The applicant appears to have little understanding of the business world or of a particular industry, as revealed by including the wrong information or presenting it awkwardly.

Poorly reproduced. The print is faint and difficult to read.

Misspelled and ungrammatical throughout. Recruiters conclude that candidates who make seeping and grammar mistakes lack good verbal skills, which are important on the job.

Boastful. The overconfident tone makes the reader wonder whether the application's self-evaluation is realize.

Dishonest. The applicant claims to have expertise or work experience or work experience that he or she does not possess.

Gimmicky. The words, structure, decoration, or material used in the resume depart so far from the usual as to make the resume ineffective.

Produce your Traditional Resume

With less than a minute to make a good impression, your resume needs to look sharp and grab a recruiter's interest in the first few lines. A typical recruiter devotes 45 seconds to each resume before tossing it into either the "maybe" or the "reject" pile.

Try to keep your resume to one page. If you have a great deal of experience and are applying for a higher-level position, you may need to prepare a somewhat longer resume. The important thing is to have enough space to present a persuasive, but accurate, portrait of your skills and accomplishments.

Checklist: Writing ResumeA. Organizational approach

1. Use the chronological approach unless you have a weak employment history
2. Use the functional approach if you are new to the job market, want to redirect your career, or have gaps in your employment history.
3. Use the combined approach to maximize the advantages of both chronological and functional resumes, but only when neither of the other two formats will work.

B. Format and Style

1. Use short noun phrases and action verbs, not whole sentences.
2. Use facts, not opinions.
3. Adopt a "you" attitude.

2. Leave personal interest off unless they are relevant to the position being sought.
3. List a reference only with permission to do so.

Balance Common Language with Current Jargon

Another way to maximize hits on your resume is to use words that potential employers will understand (for example, use keyboard, not input device). Also, use abbreviations sparingly (except for common ones such as BA or MBA).

Submitting Scannable Resume

When submitting your resume by email, don't attach it as a separate document. Most human resources departments won't accept attached files. Instead, paste your resume into the body of your email message. Whenever you know a reference number or a job ad number, include it in your e-mail subject line.

Proofread your resume

Once your resume is complete, update it continuously, as already mentioned, employment is becoming much more flexible these days, so it's likely you'll want to change employers.

Application Letters

- Whenever you submit your resume
- Accompany it with a cover, or application, letter to let readers know
- What you're sending
- Why you're sending it, and
- How they can benefit from reading it. Because your application letter is in your own style (rather than the choppy, shorthand style of your resume)
- You a change to show your communication skills and some personality.

Send you resume and application letter together, because each has a unique job to perform. The purpose of your resume is to get employers interested enough to contact you for an interview. The purpose of your application letter is to get employers interested enough to read your resume.

- Learn something about the organization you're applying to;
- Then focus on your audience;
- Imagine yourself in the recruiter's situation, and
- Show how your background and talents will solve a particular problem or
- Fill a specific need the company has. During your research, find out the name, title of the person to contact.
- So respect your reader's time,
- Include nothing in your cover letter that already appears in your resume.
- Keep your letter straightforward, fact-based, short, upbeat, and professional. (drafting cover letter)
- Be Specific.
- Avoid general objectives.
- Be as clear as possible about the kind of opportunity and industry you're looking for.

Make-email cover even shorter. When sending a cover letter by e-mail, make it a bit shorter than traditional application letters. Remember, e-mail readers want the gist very quickly.

Aim for high quality. Carefully check your spelling, mechanics, and grammar. Employers and complaining about the declining quality of written communication, including cover letters. 2 types of cover letter

Two Types of Job Letters

Solicited application letter is in response to an announced job opening – you'll usually know what qualifications the organization is seeking. You'll also have more competition because hundreds of other job seekers will have seen the listing and may be sending applications too.

- I would like to apply for the position of Accountant advertised in Sunday's The News.
- Please consider me a candidate for the Account Assistants position advertised in Yesterday's "The Dawn".

In the October 31 issues of the Daily Post, you ad mentioned "proven skills". I believe I have what you are looking for in an administrative assistant. In addition to experience in a variety of office settings, I am familiar with the computer software used in your office.

An unsolicited letter is sent to an organization that has not announced an opening – stands a better chance of being read and receiving individualized attention.

You should gain attention by focusing on the needs of the employer.

If there is a vacancy in your organization for a competent Accountant, I may please be considered a candidate.

Mr. Ahmed, the head of your marketing department tell me that you have an opening in your office for an experienced computer programmer I would like to apply for this position.

I understand that you are looking for an experienced computer programmer.

Both solicited and unsolicited letters present your qualifications similarly. The main difference is in the opening paragraph. In a solicited letter, you need no special attention-getter because you have been invited to apply. In an unsolicited letter, you need to start by capturing the reader's attention and interest. Aida

Getting Attention

Follow the AIDA approach when writing your application letter: attention, interest, desire, action.

Like your resume, your application letter is a form of advertising, so organize it as you would a sales letter:

Use the AIDA approach,
Focus on your audience,
Emphasize reader benefits.
Make sure your style projects confidence.

To sell a potential employer on your merits, you must believe in them and sound as though you do.

An Unsolicited Confident Opening

You want retail clerks and managers who are accurate, enthusiastic, and experienced. You want someone who cares about customer service, who understands merchandizing, and who can work with others to get the job done. When you're ready to hire a manager trainee or a clerk who is willing to work towards promotion, please consider me for the job.

The opening of an application letter captures attention, gives the reason you're writing, and states which job you're applying for.

Open a solicited application letter by mentioning how you found out about the position.

Please consider my application for an entry-level position in technical writing. Your firm advertised a position (on September 23, 2006, in the New Sun). With my two years experience, won't you consider me for that position?

Building Interest and Increasing Desire

The middle section of your application letter presents your strongest selling, points in terms of their potential benefit to the organization, thereby building interest in you and creating a desire to interview you.

- The middle section of an application letter
- Summarized your relevant qualifications
- Emphasized your accomplishments
- Suggests desirable personal qualities
- Justifier's salary requirements
- Refers to your resume

Unsolicited Application Letters

Show how your strongest skills will benefit the organization. A 20 years old his/her third year of college might begin like this:

When you need a secretary in your export division who can take shorthand at 125 words a minute and transcribe notes at 70 – in English, Urdu or Portuguese – call me.

Describe your understanding of the job's requirements and then show how well your qualifications fit them.

- Mention the name of a person known to and highly regarded by the reader

When Ahmad Hassan of your franchise sales division spoke to your business communication class last week, he said you often need promising new marketing graduates at this time of year.

- Use a question to demonstrate your understanding of the organization's need.

Can your fast-growing market research division use an interviewer with 1½ years of field survey experience, a B.A in public relations, and a real desire to succeed? If so, please consider me for the position.

Solicited Application Letters

Identify the publication in which the ad ran; then describe what you have to offer

Your ad in the April issue of Travel & Leisure for a cruise-line social director caught my eye. My eight years of experience as a social direction in the travel industry would allow me to serve your new Caribbean cruise division well.

Spell out a few of your key qualification, and back up your assertions with some convincing evidence of your ability to perform:

Poor: I completed three college courses in business communication, earning an A in each course, and have worked for the past year at Imperial Construction

Improved: Using the skills gained from three semesters of college training in business communication, I developed a collection system for Imperial Construction that reduced its 2001 bad-debt losses by 3.7 percent, or Rs. 90,000, over those of 2000. Instead of using timeworn terminology, the new system's collection letters offered discount incentives for speedy payment.

The middle of your application letter also demonstrates a few significant job-related qualities, such as your diligence or your ability to work hard, learn quickly, handle responsibility, or get along with people:

While attending college full-time, I trained 3 hours a day with the varsity track team. In addition, I worked part-time during the school years and up to 60 hours a week each summer in order to be totally self-supporting while in college. I can offer you organization the same level of effort and perseverance.

Another matter you might bring up in this section in your salary requirement – but only if the organization has asked you to state them.

For the past two years. I have been helping a company similar to yours organize its database. I would therefore like to receive a salary in the same range over twenty for helping your company set up a more efficient customer database.

Toward the end of this section, refer the reader to your resume by citing a specific fact or general point covered there:

Motivating Action

The final paragraph of your application letter has two important functions:

to ask the reader for a specific action and to make a reply easy. In almost all cases, the action you request is an interview. Don't demand it, however; try to sound natural.

After you have reviewed my qualifications, could we discuss the possibility of putting my marketing skills to work for your company? Because I will be on spring break the week of March 8, I would like to arrange a time to talk then. I will call in late February to schedule a convenient time when we would discuss employment opportunities at your company.

Adapting Style and Approach to Culture

The AIDA approach isn't appropriate for job seekers in every culture. If you're applying for a job abroad or want to work with a subsidiary of an organization based in another country, you may need to adjust your tone.

Guideline for Writing Applications Letters

A. Attention (opening paragraph)

1. Open the letter by capturing the reader's attention in a businesslike way.
2. Use a summary, name, source, question, news, personalized, or creative opening.
3. State that you are applying for a job, and identify the position or the type of work you seek.

B. Interest and desire, or evidence of qualifications (next several paragraphs)

1. Present your key qualifications for the job, highlighting what is on your resume: job-related education and training; relevant work experience; and related activities, interests, and qualities.
2. Adopt a mature, businesslike tone.
3. Eliminate boasting and exaggeration.
4. Back up your claims by citing specific, achievements in educational, work, and outside settings.

8. Outline your educational preparation for the job.
9. Provide evidence that you can learn quickly, work hard, handle responsibility, and get along with others.
10. Show that you possess personal qualities and work attitudes that are desirable for job performance.
11. If asked to state salary requirements in your letters, state current salary or a desired salary range, and link it to the benefits of hiring you.
12. Refer the reader to the enclosed resume.

C. Action (Closing Paragraph)

1. Request an interview at the reader's convenience.
2. Request a screening interview with the nearest regional representative, if company headquarters is some distance away.
3. Make it easy to comply with your request by providing your phone number (with area code) and stating the best time to reach you, or mention a time when you will be calling to set up an interview.
4. Express your appreciation for an opportunity to have an interview.
5. Repeat your strongest qualification, to reinforce your claim that you can contribute to the organization.

JOB INQUIRY LETTER AND INTERVIEW

Use a job-inquiry letter to request an application form, which is a standardized data sheet that simplifier's comparison of applicant's credentials.

Your care in filling out application forms suggests to the employer that you will be thorough and careful in your work.

Guideline Writing Follow-up Messages

B. Inquiries

1. Make an inquiry – by letter, phone, or email – if you aren't informed of the decision by the promised date.
2. Follow the plan for direct requests: main idea, necessary details, specific request.

C. Requests for a time extension.

1. Request an extension if you have pending interviews and need time to decide about an offer.
2. Open with an expression of warmth.
3. In the middle, explain why you need more time and express continued interest in the company.
4. In the close, promise a quick decision if your request is denied, and ask for a confirmation if your request is granted.

Application Follow-Ups

Unsolicited even if you've received a letter acknowledging your application and saying that it will be kept on file, don't hesitate to send a follow-up letter three months later to show that you are still interested.

Three months have elapsed since I applied to you for an accountant position, but I want to let you know that I ma still very interested in joining your company.

Please keep my application in your active file, and let me know when a position opens for a capable accountant.

Unless you state otherwise, the human resources office is likely to assume that you've already found a job and are no longer interested in the organization. Moreover, requirements change. A follow-up letter can demonstrate that you're sincerely interested in working for the organization, that you're persistent in pursuing your goals, and that you're upgrading your skills to make yourself a better employee. And it might just get you an interview.

If your application letter and resume fail to bring a response within a month or so, following up with a second letter to keep your file active. This follow-up letter also gives you a chance to update your original application with any recent job-related information.

Since applying to you on May 3 for an executive secretary position, I have completed a course in office management at Community College. I received straight A's in the course. I now am a proficient user of MS Word, including macros and other complex functions.

Please keep my application in your active file, and let me know when you need a skilled executive secretary.

Understanding the Interview Process

	Big Companies	Small Companies
--	---------------	-----------------

Number and type of applicants sought	Consistently hire thousands of new employees each year; have relatively specific hiring criteria, depending on the position; tend to be highly selective	Hire requirement fluctuate, often looking for flexibility, versatility; often somewhat more open-minded
Person or department in charge of recruiting	Handled by human resources or personnel department	In really small companies, the founder/top manager makes all hiring decisions
General recruiting and interviewing style	Governed by formal policies and procedures; typically involves series of several interviews; approach is generally systematic, well planned, and well financed	Conducted informally on an as-needed basis without a standard procedure; hiring decision may be made after first interview or may drag on for several months;

Understanding the Interview Process

An employment interview is a formal meeting in which both employer and applicant ask questions and exchange information to learn more about each other.

Dual purpose

1. The organization's main objective is to find the best person
2. The applicant's main objective is to find the job test suited to his or her goals and capabilities.

Organizations hundreds of new employees every years take a more systematic approach to the recruiting and interviewing process

Adjust your job search according to the company's size and hiring practices.

Start seeking jobs well in advance of the date you want to start work. Begin job search as much as nine months. During downturns in the economy, early planning is even more crucial.

The typical Sequence of Interviews

In a typical job search, you can expect to have many interviews before your accept a job offer. A candidate undergoes a rigorous interview process that can take.

Most organization interview an applicant several times before extending a job offer:

- Screening stage
- Selection stage
- Final stage

The Typical Sequence of Interviews

Interviews at the screening stage are fairly structured, so applicants are often asked roughly the same questions. Many companies use standardized evaluation sheets to "grade".

Technology has transformed the initial, get-to-know-you interview, allowing employers to screen candidates by phone, video interview, or computer.

During the screening stage of interviews, try to differentiate yourself from other candidates. You might face a panel of several interviewers who ask you questions during a single session. By noting how you listen, think, and express yourself, they can decide how likely you are to get along with colleagues.

Best approach during this selection stage on interviews is to show interest in the job, related your skills and experience to the organization's needs, listen attentively, ask insightful question, and display enthusiasms.

During the final stage, the interview may try to sell you on working for the firm.

You may be invited back for a final evaluation by a higher-ranking executive who has the authority to make the hiring decision and to decide to your compensation. As underlying objective of the final stage is often to sell you on the advantages of joining the organization.

Organizations use various types of interviews to discover. A structured interview is generally used in the screening stage. A Structured Interview

Open-ended Interview	Group Interview
Stress Interview	Video Interview
Situational Interview

structural interview is controlled by the interviewer to gather facts. Here the employer controls the interview by asking a series of prepared questions in a set order. Working form a checklist, the interviewer asks candidates each question, staying within an allotted time period. All answers are noted. Although useful in gathering facts, the structured interview is generally regarded as a poor measure of an applicant's personal qualities. Some companies use structured interviews to create uniformity in their hiring process.

Types of Interview

Opening-ended interview is less formal and unstructured. In an open-ended interview, the recruiter encourages the candidate to speak freely. The interviewer poses broad, open-ended question and encourages the applicant to talk freely. Good for bringing out an applicant's personality and is used to test professional judgment. However, some candidates reveal too much, rambling on about personal or family problems that have nothing to do with their qualifications for employment, their ability to get along with co-workers, or any personal interests that could benefit their performance on the job. So be careful. To strike a delicate balance between being friendly and remembering that you're in a business situation.

Group interviews meeting with several candidates simultaneously. Group interviews help recruiters see how candidate interact. This types of interview is useful for judging interpersonal communication.

It tells how candidates relate to one another. Do they smile? Are they supportive of one another's comments? Do they try to score points at each other's expense?

Perhaps the most unnerving types of interview is the stress interview. Stress interviews help recruiters see how you handle yourself under pressure. See how well a candidate handles stressful situations. During a stress interview, you might be asked pointed questions designed to irk or unsettle you. You might be subjected to long periods of silence, criticisms of your appearance, deliberate interruptions, abrupt or even hostile reactions by the interviewer.

Video interviews require some special preparation.

As employers try to cut travel costs, the video interview is becoming more popular. Companies use videoconferencing systems to screen middle-management candidates or to interview new recruits at universities. Experts recommend that candidates prepare a big differently for a video interview than for an in-person meeting:

- Ask for a preliminary phone conversation to establish rapport with the interviewer.

- Arrive early enough to get used to the equipment and setting.
- During the interview, speak clearly but not more slowly than normal.
- Sit straight.
- Look up but not down.
- Try to show some animation, but not too much (since it will appear blurry to the interviewer).

Situational interview. In situational interviews, candidates must explain how they would handle a specific set of circumstances. “How would you handle this?” Proponents of this approach claim that interview is about the job, not about a candidate’s five-year goals, weaknesses or strengths, challenging experiences, or greatest accomplishment. So the situational interview is a hands-on, at-work meeting between an employer who needs a job done and a worker who must be fully prepared to do the work.

Regardless of the type of interview you may face, a personal interview is vital because your resume can’t show whether you’re lively and outgoing or subdued and low key, able to take direction or able to take charge. Each job requires a different mix of personality traits. The interview’s task is to find out whether you will be effective on the job.

What Employers Look For

Having the right personality traits for the job is important in today’s workplace. A sense of humor tops the list because they believe that people who don’t take themselves too seriously are better able to cope with the stress. Employees who are self-motivated, enthusiastic, not afraid to make decisions, willing to take risks, intelligent, good communicators, and considerate of others.

Current research shows that employees with certain personality traits tend to be more successful at their job. As a result, many employers today seek candidates with a high “emotional intelligence,” or EQ (emotional quotient). People with a high EQ generally possess these desirable attributes: self-awareness, good impulse control, persistence, confidence, self-motivation, and empathy, as well as the ability to persuade, articulate a mission, interpret the mood of a group, and communicate with people in terms they understand.

What’s your EQ?

- Think clearly and stay focused on the task at hand while under pressure
- Admit to your own mistakes
- Meeting commitments and keep promises
- Hold yourself accountable for meeting your goals
- Seek new ideas for a variety of sources
- Handle multiple demands and changing priorities.
- Make sacrifices to meet an important organizational goal.
- Cut through red tape and bend outdated rules when necessary
- Seek fresh perspectives, even if that means trying something totally new
- Separate form an expectation of success rather than a fear of failure
- Try to learn how to improve your performance
- Set challenging goals and take calculated risks to reach them.

When it comes down to it, every job has basic qualifications. Employers first look for two things: evidence that a candidate will fit in with the organization and proof that the person can handle a specific job.

Compatibility

Interviewers try to decide whether a candidate will be compatible with the other people in the organization. Compatibility with the organization is judgment on the basis of personal background attitudes, and style. Some interviewers believe that personal background is an indication of how well the candidate will fit in, so they might ask about your interests, hobbies, awareness of world events, and so forth. You can expand your potential along these lines by reading widely, making an effort to meet new people, and participating in discussion groups, seminars, and workshops.

Qualifications for the Job

Suitability for the specific job is judged on the basis of

- Academic preparation
- Work experience
- Job-related personality traits

When you're invited to interview for a position, the interviewer may already have some idea of whether you have the right qualifications, based on a review of your resume. But during the interview, you'll be asked to describe your education and previous jobs in more depth so that the interviewer can determine how well your skills match the requirements. In many cases, the interview will be seeking someone with the flexibility to apply diverse skills in several areas.

Pre-employment tests attempt to provide objective, quantitative information about a candidate's skills, attitudes, and habits.

Pre-employment Test

Three types of pre-employment tests frequently administered by companies are job skills tests, psychological tests, and drug tests. Job-skills tests, the most common type, are designed to access competency or specific abilities needed to perform a job. Psychological tests usually take the form of questionnaires. These tests can be used to assess overall intellectual ability, attitudes toward work, interests, managerial potential, or personality characteristics – including dependability, commitment, honesty, and motivation.

Preparing for a Job Interview

List six tasks you need to complete to prepare for a successful job interview.

For a success interview, preparation is mandatory. The best way to prepare for a job interview is to think about the job itself and prepare. It's perfectly normal to feel a little anxious before an interview. But good preparation will help you perform well. Be sure to consider any cultural differences when preparing for interviews, and base your approach on what your audience expects. Before the interview, learn about the organization, think ahead about questions, bolster your confidence, polish your interview style, plan to look good, and be ready when you arrive.

Learn About the Organization

When planning your employment search, you probably already researched the companies you sent your resume to. But now that you've been invited for an interview, you'll want to fine-tune your research and brush up on the facts you've collected.

Today's companies expect serious candidates to demonstrate an understanding of the company's operations, its market, and its strategic and tactical problems. Learning about the organization and the job enables you to show the interviewer just how you will meet the organization's particular needs.

Planning for a Successful Interview

How can you practice for a job interview? What are some questions that you might be asked, and how should you respond? What questions are you not obligated to answer?

Think Ahead about Questions

Bolster Your Confidence

If you feel shy or self-conscious, remember that recruiters are human too.

By building your confidence, you'll make a better impression. The best way to counteract any apprehension is to remove its source. You may feel shy or self-conscious because you think you have some flaw that will prompt others to reject you. Bear in mind, however, that you're much more conscious of your limitations than other people are.

Polish your interview Style

Staging mock interview with a friend is a good way to hone your style.

Nonverbal behaviour has a significant effect on the interviewer's opinion of you.

Confidence helps you walk into an interview, but once you're there, you want to give the interviewer an impression of poise, good manners, and good judgment. Some job seekers hire professional coaches and image consultants to create just the right impression.

Plan to Look Good

To look like a winner

- Dress conservatively
- Be well groomed
- Smile when appropriate

Physical appearance is important because clothing and grooming reveal something about a candidate's personality and professionalism. When it comes to clothing, the best policy is to dress conservatively. Wear the best-quality businesslike cloth you can, preferably in a dark, solid color.

Interviewing for Success

Be prepared for the interview by

- Taking proof of your accomplishments
- Arriving on time
- Waiting graciously

How you handle a particular interview depends on where you stand in the interview process. If you're being interviewed for the first time, your main objective is to differentiate yourself from the many other candidates who are also being screened.

In Warm-up

Of the three stages, the warm-up is the most important, even though it may account for only a small fraction of the time you spend in the interview. Psychologists say that 50 percent of an interview's decision is made within the first 30 to 60 seconds, and another 25 percent is made within 15 minutes. If you get off to a bad start, it's extremely difficult to turn the interview around.

The Questions and answer stage

Questions and answers will consume the greatest part of the interview. The interviewer will ask you about your qualifications and discuss many of the points mentioned in your resume. You'll also be asking questions of your own.

Dealing with Questions

Tailor your answers to emphasize your strengths

Listening to the Interviewer

Paying attention to both verbal and nonverbal messages can help you turn the question and answer stage to your advantage

Fielding Discriminatory Questions

Some questions should not be asked by interviews.

To Close

Like the opening, the end of the interview is more important than its duration would indicate. In the last few minutes, you need to evaluate how well you've done. You also need to correct any misconceptions the interviewer might have.

Concluding Gracefully

Conclude the interview with courtesy and enthusiasms:

You can generally tell when the interviewer is trying to conclude the session. He or she may ask whether you have any more questions, sum up the discussion, change position, or indicate with a gesture that the interview is over.

Discussing Salary

Be realistic in your salary expectations and diplomatic in your negotiations.

If you do receive an offer during the interview, you'll naturally want to discuss salary. However, let the interviewer raise the subject. If asked your salary requirements, say that you would expect to receive the standard salary for the job in question.

When to Negotiate

If you don't like the offer, you might try to negotiate, provided you're in a good bargaining position and the organization has the flexibility to accommodate you.

What to Negotiate

Negotiating benefits may be one way to get more value from an employment package.

Even if you can't bargain for more money, you may be able to win some concessions on benefit and perquisites. The value of negotiating can be significant because benefits often cost employer 25 to 45 percent of your salary.

Interview Notes

Keep a written record of your job interviews.

If yours is a typical job search, you'll have many interviews before you accept an offer. For that reason, keeping a notebook on binder of interview notes can help you refresh your memory of each conversation. As soon as the interview ends, jot down the names and titles of the people you met. Briefly summarize the interviews answers to your questions.

- During the selection stage of interviews, you may interview with several people, perhaps even all at once. Night face a panel of several interviewers who ask you questions during a noting how you listen, think, and express yourself, they can decide how likely you are to get along with colleagues. Best approach during this selection stage of interviews is to show interest in the job, relate your skills and experience to the organization's needs listen attentively, ask insightful questions, and display enthusiasm.
- During the final stage, the interviewer may try to sell you on working for the firm. May be invited back for a final evaluation by a higher-ranking executive who has the authority to make the hiring decision and to decide on your compensation. An underlying objective of the final stage is often to sell you on the advantages of joining the organizations.

Application Follow-Ups

If your application letter and resume fail to bring a response within a month or so, follow up with a second letter to keep your file active. This follow-up letter also gives you a chance to update your original application with any recent job-related information:

Since applying to your on May 3 for an executive secretary position, I have completed a course in office management at ABC Community College. I received straight A's in the course. I now am a proficient user of MS Word, including macros and other complex functions.

Please keep my application in your active file, and let me know when you need a skilled executive secretary.

A Letter of Acknowledge

Even if you've received a letter acknowledge your application and saying that it will be kept on file, don't hesitate to send a follow-up letter three months later to show that you are still interested:

Three months have elapsed since I applied to you for an underwriting position, but I want to let you know that I am still very interested in joining your company.

I recently completed a four-week temporary work assignment at a large local insurance agency. I learned several new verification techniques and gained experience in using the online computer system. This experience could increase my value to your underwriting department.

ORAL PRESENTATION

Successful Oral Presentation

In your personal life and in the world of business, you orally communicate with your customers, colleagues, associates, superiors, employees, employers and others. But this communication does not need any special preparation as this is simply a face to face conversation in which you can convey your message very easily and without any hesitation. However, at certain occasion you have to talk to a big audience such as employees to convince to do hard work and customer to trust you..

Presentation

This action of communication in which one speaker is doing most of the sending and a number of listeners are doing most of the receiving is known as oral presentation

Successful oral presentation creates mutual understanding.

Successful Oral Presentation

An oral presentation creates mutual understanding between audience and speaker so you will have to give yourself some time to improve your oral presentation skills. For oral presentations, you need the different steps to be effective in your oral presentation.

- Stages for preparing oral presentations.
- Types of oral presentations.
- Art of delivering the oral message.
- Delivering the speech.
- Nonverbal delivery.

Three main steps

The Three Step Oral Presentation Process

Regardless of your job or the purpose of your presentation, you will be more effective if you adopt an oral presentation process that follows these three steps:

1. Planning your presentation
2. Writing your presentation
3. Completing your presentation

The content and style of speeches and presentations vary, depending on your purpose.

Planning Oral Presentation

Planning oral presentations is much like planning any other business message: it requires analyzing your purpose and your audience, investigating necessary information, and adapting your message to the occasion and your audience so that you can establish a good relationship.

The four basic purposes for giving a presentation are to inform, to persuade, to motivate, and to entertain. Here are sample statements of purpose for business presentation:

To Inform

Here your objective is to clarify, explain a process. As teacher, delivers a lecture to inform. In brief, at the conclusion of your message you hope your listeners have a better comprehension of an issue, an idea, a process, a procedure that you have talked about.

Planning Oral Presentation

- To inform the accounting department of the new remote data-access policy
- To explain to the executive committee the financial ramifications of OmniGroup's takeover offer

2. To Persuade

Gaining willing acceptance of an idea is objective to persuasion. Note that the key word here is willing. Your goal is that after you have finished your presentation, listeners will accept your proposal. You hope they will do as you ask them to do.

- To persuade potential customers that our bank offers the best commercial banking services for their needs

To Motivate

To motivate the sales force to increase product sales by 10 percent.

Gear the content, organization, and style of your message to your audience's size, background, attitudes, and interests.

Audience analysis

Audience Analysis

A. Determine audience size and composition

1. Estimate how many people will attend.
2. Consider whether they have some political, religious, professional, or other affiliation in common.
3. Analyze the mix of men and women, age ranges, socioeconomic and ethnic groups, occupations, and geographic regions represented.

Predict the audience probable reaction.

B. Predict the audience's probable reaction

1. Analyze why audience members are attending the presentations
2. Determine the audience's general attitude toward the topic: interested, moderately interested, unconcerned, open-minded, or hostile.
4. Analyze the mood that people will be in when you speak to them.
3. Find out what kind of backup information will most impress the audience: technical data, historical information, financial data, demonstrations, samples, and so on.
4. Consider whether the audience has any biases that might work against you.
5. Anticipate possible objections or questions.

Gauge the audience's understanding.

C. Gauge the audience's level of understanding.

1. Analyze whether everybody has the same background and experience.
2. Determine what the audience already knows about the subject
3. Decide what background information the audience will need to better understand the subject.
4. Consider whether the audience is familiar with your vocabulary.
5. Analyze what the audience expects from you.
6. Think about the mix of general concepts and specific details you will need to present.

Defining main idea

Main Ideas or Content

Brainstorm your ideas first. Then decide which ideas are more relevant and appropriate to your audience and to your objective. Carryout any research that is necessary. Be selective, your first list of ideas may be disorganized. Later you can select those ideas that are workable. Don't think this initial structure will be your final version.

Step 2: Writing Oral Presentation

The main idea points out how the audience can benefit from your message.

Convince audience that reorganizing the data-processing department will improve customer service and reduce employee turnover

- Convince audience that we should build a new plant in Lahore to eliminate manufacturing bottlenecks and improve production quality

- Address audience's concerns regarding a new employee health-care plan by showing how the plan will reduce costs and improve the quality of care

Limit your scope

Effective presentation focuses on audience's need but also tailor messages to the time allowed

Limit Your Scope

- In one minute, the average speaker can deliver about one paragraph or 125 to 150 words.(7500 to 9000 wph)
- Fit your oral presentation to the time allotted.
- Introduction
- Conclusion
- Time to each point
- 10 minutes presentation / one hour

Choose your approach

Choose Your Approach

With a well defined idea you begin to arrange your message

Choose Your Approach

- Structure a short oral presentation like a letter or a memo
- Organize language speeches and presentations like formal reports.
- For bad news or persuasive plan to arouse interest or give a preview

Long presentation

Long presentation: If purpose is to entertain Motivate or inform
Use direct order and a structure imposed naturally by the subject.

Importance, sequence, chronology, spatial orientation, geography or category.

If you purpose is to analyze, persuade or collaborate organize your material around conclusions and recommendation or around a logical arguments.

Use direct order if the audience is receptive use indirect if you expect resistance.

Regardless of the length of your presentation, bear in mind that simplicity of organization is valuable in oral presentation. (outline)

Step 2: Writing Oral Presentation

Prepare Your Outline

A Carefully prepared outline can be more than just the starting point for composing a speech or presentation – it will help your stay on task. You can use your outline to make sure your message accomplishes its purpose to help your keep your presentation both audience-centered and within the allotted time. If you plan to deliver your presentation from notes rather than from a written text, your outline can also become your final “script”.

Outline will serve you speaking notes

The heading should be complete sentences or lengthy phrase not one two word

Include visual aid

Use transmittal sentences Outlines can help you compose your presentation and stay on task.

Decide on style

Chose your style to fit the occasion your audience size subject purpose

Decide on an Appropriate Style

- Use a casual style for small groups; use a formal style for large groups and important events.
- In both formal and informal presentations, keep things simple.

Developing Your Oral Presentation

How formal presentations differ from formal reports:

- More interaction with the audience
- Use of nonverbal cues to express meaning
- Less control of contents
- Greater need to help the audience stay on track

Introduction

- The introduction must capture attention, inspire confidence, and preview the contents.

Arousing Audience Interest

- To capture attention, connect your topic to your listeners' needs and interests.
- Match the introduction to the tone of your presentation

Body

- Limit the body to three or four main points
- Help your audience follow your presentation by using clear transitions between sentences and paragraphs, as well as between major sections.
- Emphasize your transition by repeating key ideas, using gestures, changing your tone of voice, or introducing a visual aid.

Holding Your Audience's Attention

- Relate your subject to your audience's needs.
- Anticipate your audience's questions
- Use clear, vivid language
- Explain the relationship between your subject and familiar ideas.

Close

- To close should leave a strong and lasting impression

Restating Your main Points

Summarize the main idea, and restart the main points

- Increase the overall level of compensation
- Install a cash bonus program
- Offer a variety of stock-based incentives
- Improve our health insurance and pension benefits

By making these improvements, we can help your company cross the threshold of growth into the major leagues.

Describing the Next Steps

- Be certain that everyone agrees on the outcome and understands what should happen next.
- Make your final words memorable
- Completing oral presentation
- Evaluate the content of your message

Types of Oral Presentations

The effectiveness of your presentation largely depends on how it is delivered. Following are four main delivery methods, you can choose according to need and situation.

1. Extemporaneous

This method of delivery is very carefully planned and practiced. In it, the speaker, makes a presentation with the help of an outline, note cards, or visual aid. It is very popular and effective method of delivering a speech. In this way the speaker can glance at his notes, keep eye contact and speak in a natural, conversational tone.

2. Reading

In this method the whole presentation is read aloud. It helps a speaker when the presentation has technical or complex topic. If you choose to read your speech, practice enough so that you can still have eye contact with your audience, otherwise, your speech may become boring.

For reading, some speakers use a page style similar to a TV script, leaving a left margin of about one-third of the page. In that wide margin are pronunciation aids or suggestions as to where to look in an audience.

3. Memorization

Few speakers today memorize complete speeches. However, it can be useful for short speeches. In case of a long speech, often the first few words of a statement can be memorized. This technique may sound like a robot. Besides, forgetting a single line may cause disaster.

4. Impromptu

It means a speech made without any preparation or made on the spur of the moment. In so many situations you are asked to make a speech or offer your comments, when you're asked to speak "off the cuff", take a moment or two to think through what you're going to say. Avoid the temptation to beat about the bush.

You may feel a bit of stage fright at the time of delivering the speech. In addition to the stages mentioned above, you should focus on the following aspects to decrease stage fright.

Show Confidence

You will be nervous at the beginning of your presentation. Don't worry – most people are nervous. Try not to speak too fast during the first couple of minutes. This is the time you establish your rapport with the audience. Remember your first impressions are very important. You may find it helpful to memorize your introduction. Move during the speech. Some movements hold audience attention. If you're seated, shift position in your chair or gesture a bit more with your arms.

Preparing to speak

Knowing your material and practicing your delivery can build your confidence

Make sure you know the location and have everything you need (projector, microphone chalkboard etc)

If addressing audience that doesn't speak your language consider using an interpreter

Important to take into account any cultural differences in appearance mannerism or other custom

Overcoming anxiety

If you are nervous about facing audience and experience stage fright

Prepare more material

Rehearse

Think positively

Body Language: Stand rather than sit when you are delivering your presentation and try to be aware of any repetitive hand gestures or awkward mannerisms that might irritate your audience.

Voice Quality: You must be clearly audible at all times – don't let your voice drop at the end of sentences. If you vary your intonation, your voice will be more interesting to listen to and you will be able to make your points more effectively.

Visual aids: Use your visual aids confidently, making sure you allow your audience time to absorb information from flipcharts and transparencies.

Delivery

Audience reaction: Be ready to deal with any hostile questions. Polite, diplomatic answers are a good disarming tactic, but if you should find yourself 'under fire', suggest that the audience keeps any further questions until the end of the presentation and continue with your next point.

Language

Simplicity: use short words and sentences that you are comfortable with. There is no benefit in using difficult language.

Clarity: Active verbs and concrete words are much clearer and easier to understand than passive verbs and abstract concepts. Avoid jargon unless you are sure all your audience will understand it.

Signaling: Indicate when you've complete one point or section in your presentation and are moving on the text. Give your audience clear signals as to the direction your presentation is taking.

Handling question responsively

Question and answer period is very important
Give chance to obtain impotent information
To emphasize your main idea and supporting points
Treat hostile question as legitimate request for information
Maintain professionalism to improve your credibility
Focus on the questioner using body language to emphasize the fact that you are listening to him keep your answer short and to the point
Maintain control by stating some ground rules in the beginning of the question and answer session
Respond unemotionally
Motivate question
Conclude your presentation finish on time

‘Good afternoon, everybody. I’d like to thank you all for being here’.

‘My purpose today is to tell you about our corporate strategy for the next decade, and, more specifically to bring you up to date With our plans for Quetta.’

To start with I’d like to describe briefly our current marketing policy in the Punjab. Then I’ll illustrate some of the problems we’re having over market share. After that I’ll quickly outline the opportunities we see for further progress in the 21st century. Finally I’ll quickly sum up before concluding with some recommendations.

Please feel free to interrupt me if you have any questions at any time.

Now I’d like to draw your attention to chart B showing our sales revenue and pre-tax profits over the last ten years. You will notice that although turnover has risen, our profits have not increased at the same rate.

I’ve talked about our current position in the Punjab and I’ve pointed out some of the problems we are facing. Well, what options are open to us now? Where do we go from here?

‘As I have already indicated I think our first priority must be to build on the excellent results we have achieved in certain markets in Sindh . I’m referring of course, to Karachi and Haidrabad Spain. Let me quickly expand on those successes before we move on.

‘We should not forget the Peshawar market. Admittedly our results there have been poor so far, but there are signs the market is changing and we can learn a lot from our mistakes On balance, though, I think we stand to gain most from concentrating on southern areas and I strongly recommend we put all our efforts into further expansion in these areas.

In conclusion, may I thank you all for being such an attentive and responsive audience. Thank you also for your pertinent questions. Are there any final questions.

Negotiation Skills

- Negotiation is a process in which two or more parties try to resolve differences, solve problems and reach agreement. Good negotiation meets as many interests as possible with an agreement that is durable.
- Successful negotiators
- collaborate with another party (or parties) to reach a mutually beneficial agreement.
- use empathy appropriately because they can see the situation from others' points of view.
- put themselves in the other person's position to show them that they fully understand their needs and concerns.

Respond with honesty.

- Positive regard for yourself and the others involved will communicate your warmth and acceptance of them. Negotiators who have respect for themselves are also likely to show respect for others.
- Good negotiator's verbal and nonverbal communication is open, confident and oriented to the needs and concerns of both parties.
- Negotiation Strategies
- Although negotiation has a specific purpose – to reach agreement – it does not always achieve this aim.
- Before attempting to negotiate, consider the differences between the following four strategies.
- 1. Win-win strategy
- 2. Win-lose strategy
- 3. Lose-win strategy
- 4. Lose-Lose strategy

Win-win strategies:

- both parties are satisfied with the settlement negotiated.
- aims to meet the needs of both parties,
- not to win position or gain victories at one party's expense.
- result is hard to achieve.
- good verbal and nonverbal communication and careful listening all help to achieve it.
- succeeds only if both parties concentrate on problem solving strategies and on communicating well.
- bargaining on the interests of both parties.
- Each party is then more likely to be committed to the outcome.
- Even as you reach a win-win conclusion that suits both parties, circumstances can change. After successfully negotiating a difficult or important issue, take the time to follow up to check that the other party also considers that the result is win-win.

Win-lose strategies

- result in the party who initiates the conflict being satisfied and the other dissatisfied. This strategy focuses on the initiator's problem to the exclusion of the other's.
- The initiator wins.
- Many people who adopt this strategy use a confusing presentation or a dominating style of speech and body movement. This invites the other side to be just as difficult, or to withdraw from conflict
- Lose-win strategies
- a situation in which the initiator is dissatisfied and the other is satisfied.
- The losing party usually makes too many concessions. In an extreme case, the win-lose style of negotiation and the lose-win style of negotiation can lead to a deadlock followed by the lose-lose result. Deadlocks can occur when neither party is satisfied by the negotiations.
- Lose-lose strategies
- result form a situation in which the objectives of both parties are too rigid, or
- both parties are unable to collaborate, or unaware of the opportunity to do so.
- both parties walk away from the negotiation dissatisfied.
- When agreement cannot be reached, a third party may mediate to help them reach a solution, or arbitrate and make the decision on behalf of both parties. Both sides may lose.
- In any negotiation, be aware of your own and the other person's objectives and expectations. Keep your objectives reasonable and try to avoid the lose-lose outcome
- Personal stlye

- Personal Styles in Negotiation
- Whenever people come together to negotiate, they bring their own personal styles, and these affect the way they communicate and handle the conflict.
- Self-denying;
- people difficult to negotiate,
- are introverted and reticent with information(feedback),
- hide their feelings
- Self-protecting:
- People use divisionary tactics, discussing other people or side tracking to other issues hide their true feelings
- Self-exposing;
- People wish to be centre of attention, demand this attention by speaking loudly, speak over other use attention-seeking body movement or by ignoring feedback and other's view
- Self-bargaining:
- People show feeling if you show yours. wait until you lead them in negotiation open up when others initiate the process
- Self-actualizing:
- People ideal negotiators , want information and feedback from others, present information constructively to aid the negotiation process, achieve goal without conflict(barriers

Psychological barriers

- When you are negotiating, psychological barriers may raise.
- may be produced by you or the other party.
- Be on the alert for signs of these barriers. 'Listen' for their effects and use your communication skills to ease or lower them.

Psychological barriers to negotiation may include:

- Fear of being taken for a ride
- Wanting to be liked
- Guilt about wanting to be assertive
- Wanting to be 'nice'
- Feeling intimidated by so-called powerful people
- Fear of conflict or confrontation
- Fear of losing face with the boss or colleagues
- Lack of self-confidence
- Power

Power in Negotiation

- When an organization delegates people to get the job done, it gives them power to act. Power may be used to influence and, in some cases, to control people.
- It can also be used to bring about change. Power can be exerted over one person or a group by another person or group.
- Power used well achieves good communication and results.
- Each person has and can enjoy power.
- Observe how you use power.
- If you use it properly, you will make an impact on workplace decisions and actions. Abuse or misuse it and people will mistrust you.
- Power is a useful tool in the negotiation process; however, if you misuse it or refuse to use it correctly, the likely result is tension and conflict.
- 5 types of power

Five types of workplace power .

- Legitimate power bases on a persons position or role in an organization.their authority and control over resources gives them power hat is acknowledged
- Expertise power people with more skill and strength than others have to them;their colleagues defer to them
- Reward power is exerted by someone who has control over resource desire by others.Such as person can influence and manipulate behaviour
- Coercive power is exerted by those who use their authority or any force, emotional or physical, against the interest of the other party
- Consultative power is exerted by someone who seeks information, considers other's advice and make plans with others
- They operate in any workplace, either singly or in combination. Perception of what power is and how it should be used varies between people and organizations. Acknowledgement of, and deference to, power depends on others' perception.

NEGOTIATION AND LISTENING

A Use of Power

- A person who has power, particularly over the allocation and use of resources, must be willing and able to use that power to make decisions and take action. If they refuse, or are unable to do this conflict will arise because processes that are essential to the running of the workplace do not take place.
- Don't depend solely on your workplace power source or your personal power, develop strategies that achieve results. Use your communication skills to present your ideas without producing conflict.
- Five-step approach to negotiation
- Negotiating is a process in which two or more people (or parties) with common or conflict interests decide on a specific issue or business transaction. This may at times produce win-win, win-lose-lose-win or lose-lose outcome.
- The five-step approach is more suited to a situation where the issue is more important than the relationship: for example, it is appropriate for purchasing a car but not for resolving a crisis with your partner. These five stages of the negotiation process are shown in figure 8.4.

Plan for Negotiation

- Careful and thoughtful planning is essential before you negotiate. First, create a set of clear objectives to steer you towards the results you want. Prepared objectives allow you to progress through the five stages of negotiation. Think about how your objective can be achieved.

Gather information that helps you:

- Give the other party relevant information
- Make sure that this information is accurate and objective
- Develop and maintain good relationships with the other party
- Consider the other party's point of view.
- Organize all the relevant information as this provides the ideal starting-point for your discussion. Plan your approach and the sequence of issues you wish to raise.
- Assess the other party's objectives.
- Identify links and common ground. Anticipate the party's likely response to each of your issues, and prepare answers.
- Discuss
- Set the communication climate by exchanging greetings;
- aim to establish trust and confidence.
- By being sociable you are able to establish a tension-free atmosphere.
- Review proceedings leading up to the meeting.
- Iron out any differences in 'facts' before you start to negotiate.
- Confirm both parties' broad objectives and feelings.
- Listen carefully. Identify areas of agreement and try to establish some rapport with the other party.
- Your intention is to establish common ground before moving into areas of difference.
- Propose
- Define the issues and specify in detail what you wish to resolve.,
- link issues to the other party's objectives and focus on interests rather than position.
- Detail with one issue at a time.
- Try to keep to the point and avoid generalizing,
- paraphrase their message to check that you understand it correctly.
- summarize the content, ideas and feelings being communicated.
- Negotiate the Issue

- Start by asking for what you want, but accept that your goals may have to be modified or compromised.
- collaborate your intention with the other party to produce a solution that is satisfactory to both. Remember the phrase: 'if... then...'. separate the people from the issue.
- Try to generate as many options as possible – this gives both parties room to negotiate a solution.
- Throughout the discussion keep summarizing the points to confirm understanding, particularly when complex issues are involved.
- Take the time to confirm what you have negotiated so far. Unless agreement is fully understood by both parties, the settlement may not last.
- Confirm
- Once the agreement is concluded, confirm that each party is committed to it.
- The five-step approach to negotiation will help you negotiate more effectively.
- Good negotiation strategies enable you to solve the problem in such a way that both parties win. Clearly state your needs and goals as you negotiate and listen to those expressed by the other party.
- allows each party to evaluate the other's needs and goals and the areas of common interest. People who negotiate honestly treat one another as equals. Another approach to negotiating is principled bargaining.

1. It should be a wise agreement, if possible.
2. It should be efficient.

• Principled Bargaining

- Fisher and Ury (1991) developed a concept known as principled bargaining. This works well when a group of stakeholders have a common interest.
- An acknowledgement to work together for mutual outcomes is the essence of the principled bargaining approach:
- it acknowledges the Australian ethic of a 'fair go'. Everyone is treated equitably. In Fisher and Ury's view, each negotiated agreement should satisfy the following three criteria.
- 1. It should be a wise agreement, if possible.
- 2. It should be efficient
- 3. It should improve, or at least not damage, relationship
- The principled negotiation method takes time, energy and commitment.

To implement the principled negotiation method you need to:

- Their method has four elements
- People to separate the people from the problem
- Interest to focus on interest rather than the position
- Option to generate a range of possibilities before choosing one
- Criteria to ensure that results are based on some objective standard
- To implement the principled negotiation method you need to:
- State your case clearly and persuasively
- Organize your facts well
- Be aware of the timing and speed of the talks
- Assess the others needs properly
- Be sensitive to those needs

Not be unduly worried by conflict

Be committed to a win-win philosophy

Have patience

Some time you settle less than your goal

BATNA stands for the 'best alternative to a negotiated agreement.' If the person you are negotiating with is your manager or supervisor you may have WATNA.

WATNA stand for 'worst alternative to a negotiated agreement'

If the other person has the legitimate power, or if you want the relationship to continue as it is, you may have to settle for less than your preferred outcome. You might have to modify your goal to maintain the relationship, especially if the other person is your boss. Sometimes your goal may be unrealistic and you have to modify it to make it more realistic. You may even decide not to negotiate if you feel that this will not achieve something better.

By identifying the BATNA and WATNA, you are exploring the alternatives available if negotiation is not possible. Rather than accept an unsatisfactory outcome you can say no to negotiation.

Problem solving by negotiating.....

Problem solving by negotiation is dealt with by a team or group of people who already have a working relationship and want to solve a work-related problem. The six-step approach to problem solving by negotiation will succeed only if the relationship is important to both parties and if they have a genuine desire to solve the problem rather than to win (see This 8.4)

Negotiating methods.....

In the negotiating process, the parties involved may choose one of five different negotiation methods. A skilful negotiator is able to identify them and recognize which one is being used by the other person.

1. Compromise
2. collaboration
3. competition
4. accommodation
5. withdrawal or avoidance

Compromise means to settle differences through concessions made by one or both parties. A compromise usually produces win-win or win-lose results. When the settlement meets the needs and goals of both parties (win-win), both are satisfied with the outcome. When the solution meets the needs and goals of only one party (win-lose), the other party is dissatisfied with the outcome (see figure 8.5)

Collaboration involves people cooperating to produce a solution satisfactory to both parties (win-win). It improves personal relationships and allow the exploration of new ideas. Permanent solutions and commitment to them can be achieved this way. On the other hand, it is time-consuming and demands good negotiating skills on each side.

Competition often leads to one party gaining advantage over the other, if it can negotiate at the expense of the other's needs. Since the competitive approach usually produces a win-lose result, it is bad for personal relationships. The solution is likely to be temporary as there is no commitment from the losing party, so the problem will occur again. It also leaves the losing side in a difficult situation.

Accommodation means that only one party is willing to oblige or adapt to meet the needs of the other. It produces a win-lose outcome. However, this method is useful for negotiating on minor matters. The result can go on e way or the other. It is suitable if the accommodating party does not really care about the loss. However, the negotiating parties may not bother to look for creative solutions. With this negotiations method, points of view are easily swayed.

Withdrawal (avoidance) is a negotiation method that makes both parties lose, because one party retracts their point of view or backs away form the situation. This solution. Such dissatisfaction may lead to conflict in the future.

The choices you make are influenced by the context in which you negotiate and by your range of personal communication and negotiation skills.

Skills in conflict resolution and negotiation.....

In your organization several negotiating styles and strategies are likely to be demonstrated. Some achieve acceptable responses, others hinder negotiation and conflict resolution. Some solutions may be simple and practical. Others may be complex and difficult and may even require attitude changes and commitment from each party.

Negotiation involves a range of positions by both parties. You might change the other party's position, change your own position, or arrive at a compromise. Clearly define your own objectives as well as the other party's. This places you in a better position to understand what is happening.

Figure 8.5 shows how each negotiation method affect relationships and the achievement of goals. It also matches each method with the most likely conflict resolution strategy. Once you understand them all you are in a position to decide which one is suited to a situation and your intended result.

Negotiation based on empathy for the other party establishes a climate where both parties can communicate easily. By contrast, confrontation leads to disputes and extreme positions. Check to see that covers the full list of items to be negotiated.

Focus on the problem, not individual personalities. Ask questions to check that you understand the other side's expectation and position. Avoid aggression. Use your assertive communication skills. Listen carefully to the other party.

Establish the criteria that will make a realistic solution acceptable to both parties. This may involve several options. Successful negotiation develops these options into a plan of action.

Listening

- Difference between hearing and listening
- Hearing is a physical process. The ear receive stimuli or sensations and transmit them to brain
- Listening refers to the interpretive process that takes place when we hear something. When we listen, we classify and label information
- Listening is the most important of all the communication skills. Upon awakening we listen to people, friends around us. Wherever we go, we listen to something. We spend most of our time engaged in listening. Listening occupies more time than any other communication.

What is exactly listening

- Listening is an active process of receiving aural stimulus. Listening is an active rather than a passive process.
- Listening does not just happen we must make it happen.
- A great time is spent listening and talking listening serve two purposes in its process
- 1 As the sender of the message, listening to your receiver tells you how the other person has interpreted your message
- 2 As the receiver of a message listening to the other person allows you to understand their meaning
- Purpose of listening
- serves a number of important purposes. It enables the listener to check on the accuracy of understanding what the speaker said. Besides, the listener expresses acceptance of speaker's feelings. Most important of all, listening provides a chance to the speaker to explore his or her feelings and thoughts further.
- A variety of listening skills can be learned and developed with practice The following skills are worth practicing
- Attending listening
- Encouraging listening
- Reflecting listening

- Active listening
- In attending listening you focus on speaker by giving them your physical attention you use whole body, eye contact posture personal space in short complete feedback
- Encouraging listening
- It invites speaker to say more without pressuring them to disclose their feelings or though it is their choice
- Minimal and brief responses
- Brief spoken responses let speaker know you are listening and encourage them to talk

Pause

Brief pause allows speaker time to consider reflect and decide whether to continue speaking Allow silence

Use encouraging question (5w)

Reflecting listening

Restate the speaker's feeling and contents it shows the other person you understand

Active Listening

An active listener has empathy with the speaker that shows that you understand the issue from other person point of view

Feedback is the the connecting continuing or completing link

Faults in listening

Remember that every sound or voice that we receive cannot be termed as listening.

There are certain occasions when you receive some certain sound stimulus but you do not understand it because your attention is towards something else.

In such cases, we say that you heard something but you did not listen to anything.

Moreover there are certain other factors which bar our proper listening.

An average person remembers only half of what is said during a 10-minute conversation and forgets half of that within 48 hours.

Studies agree that listening efficiency is no better than 28 to 30 percent. Following are the causes of listening pit falls:

Prejudice

All of us have personal opinions, attitudes, or beliefs about certain things. When we listen to a speaker who is contrary to our ideas, we cannot maintain attention. As a result we do not listen to whatever he says. We should give a chance to the speaker to finish his message. Later, we can agree or disagree.

Distraction

Not only the verbal messages but also the nonverbal cues of the speaker affect our listening. Actually, the entire physical environment affects listening. Among the negative factors are noisy fan, poor light, distracting background music, bang of a horn, extreme weather. Among the speaker's nonverbal cues are his clothes, his voice quality, his wearing of a certain perfume, reek of sweat, excessive gestures, etc.

Semantic barrier

Meaning of words also create problem in listening, as meaning of words vary from person to person influenced by feelings, attitudes, prejudices and biases. Sometimes the way a speaker utters a word annoys us.

Preshrinking

The average thinking capacity of a person is up to 800 words per minute while the average speaker utters 80 to 160 words per minute. This difference sometimes make listeners deviate from the speaker's words and they shift to something else. On the other hand people fill this gap by premature evaluation of what they are listening to. They arrive at the concluding thought quickly. This premature evaluation poses us our effective listening is impaired.

- Boredom or lack of interest
 - Listener's dislike of speaker
 - desire to change rather than accept the speaker
 - Tendency to make early conclusion
 - Intrusion of listeners' own values or attitude
 - Listener's opinion that the speaker lacks credibility
- Ways to improve listening

(1) Be prepared. By knowing the speaker and the topic beforehand you can prepare yourself for better understanding of the topic.

(2) Show positive attitude. Don't make premature assumptions before listening to a certain speaker. Always be ready to learn new ideas or facts that you are not aware of.

(3) Listen to learn, not to refute. While listening, try to understand the points. Don't let them mix up with your biases before you have listened and evaluated the message.

(4) Concentrate. Pay attention to what is said. You know that everything that is said has a special meaning in a certain context. Out of the context it may be misunderstood.

(5) Jot down notes. If possible, take down main ideas. These notes will help you a lot later on.

THESIS WRITING AND PRESENTATION

Writing and Presenting Your Thesis or Dissertation

- Thinking About It
- Preparing the Proposal
- Conducting the Research
- Writing the Research Paper
- Define research
- Discuss basic elements of a research paper
- Sharing the Research Outcomes with Others
- Revising the Research Paper

Thinking about it

The "thinking about it stage" is when you are finally faced with the reality of completing your degree. Usually the early phases of a graduate program proceed in clear and very structured ways. The beginning phases of a graduate program proceed in much the same manner as an undergraduate degree program. There are clear requirements and expectations, and the graduate student moves along, step by step, getting ever closer to the completion of the program. One day, however, the clear structure begins to diminish and now you're approaching the thesis/dissertation stage. This is a new and different time. These next steps are more and more defined by you and not your adviser, the program, or the department.

Thinking about it

Be inclusive with your thinking.

Don't try to eliminate ideas too quickly.

Build on your ideas and see how many different research projects you can identify.

Try and be creative.

Write down your ideas.

This will allow you to revisit an idea later on.

Or, you can modify and change an idea.

write your ideas they tend to be in a continual state of change

Good feeling to sit down and scan the many ideas

Try not to be overly influenced at this time by what you feel others expect from you (your colleagues, your profession, your academic department, etc.).

- You have a much better chance of selecting a topic that will be really of interest to you if it is your topic. .

Don't begin your thinking by assuming that your research will draw international attention to you!!

Instead, be realistic in setting your goal.

- Make sure your expectations are tempered by:
- ... the realization that you are fulfilling an academic requirement,

Be realistic about the time that you're willing to commit to your research project. If it's a 10 year project that you're thinking about admit it

- Create a draft of a timeline. the next item)
- put a start and a finish time for each.
- Post your timeline in a conspicuous place (above your computer monitor?) so that it continually reminds you how you're doing.
- Periodically update your timeline with new dates as needed.
- If you're going to ask for a leave of absence from your job while you're working on your research this isn't a good time to do it. Chances are you can do the "thinking about it" stage without a leave of absence.

- Assuming that there are six major phases that you will have during your research project, probably the best time to get the most from a leave of absence is during the fourth stage* - the writing stage.
- This is the time when you really need to be thinking well. To be able to work at your writing in large blocks of time without interruptions is something really important.
- It can be most helpful at this early stage to try a very small preliminary research study to test out some of your ideas to help you gain further confidence in what you'd like to do.
- The study can be as simple as conducting half a dozen informal interviews with no attempt to document what is said. The key is that it will give you a chance to get closer to your research and to test out whether or not you really are interested in the topic.
- And, you can do it before you have committed yourself to doing something you may not like. Take your time and try it first.

PREPARING THE PROPOSAL

Assuming you've done a good job of "thinking about" your research project, you're ready to actually prepare the proposal. A word of caution - those students who tend to have a problem in coming up with a viable proposal often are the ones that have tried to rush through the "thinking about it" part and move too quickly to trying to write the proposal. Here's a final check. Do each of these statements describe you? If they do you're ready to prepare your research proposal.

I am familiar with other research that has been conducted in areas related to my research project.

Read through someone else's research proposal. Very often a real stumbling block is that we don't have an image in our mind of what the finished research proposal should look like.

- How has the other proposal been organized?
- What are the headings that have been used?
- Does the other proposal seem clear?
- Does it seem to suggest that the writer knows the subject area? Can I model my proposal after one of the ones that I've seen? If you can't readily find a proposal or two to look at, ask your adviser to see some.

Make sure your proposal has a comprehensive review of the literature included. Now this idea, at first thought, may not seem to make sense. I have heard many students tell me that "This is only the proposal. I'll do a complete literature search for the dissertation. I don't want to waste the time now." But, this is the time to do it. The rationale behind the literature review consists of an argument with two lines of analysis: 1) this research is needed, and 2) the methodology I have chosen is most appropriate for the question that is being asked. Now, why would you want to wait? Now is the time to get informed and to learn from others who have preceded you! If you wait until you are writing the dissertation it is too late. You've got to do it some time so you might as well get on with it and do it now. Plus, you will probably want to add to the literature review when you're writing the final dissertation

What is a proposal anyway? A good proposal should consist of the first three chapters of the dissertation. It should begin with a statement of the problem/background information (typically Chapter I of the dissertation), then move on to a review of the literature (Chapter 2), and conclude with a defining of the research methodology (Chapter 3).

Of course, it should be written in a future tense since it is a proposal. To turn a good proposal into the first three chapters of the dissertation consists of changing the tense from future tense to past tense (from "This is what I would like to do" to "This is what I did") and making any changes based on the way you actually carried out the research when compared to how you proposed to do it. Often the intentions we state in our proposal turn out different in reality and we then have to make appropriate editorial changes to move it from proposal to dissertation

Focus your research very specifically. Don't try to have your research cover too broad an area. Now you may think that this will distort what you want to do. This may be the case, but you will be able to do the project if it is narrowly defined. Usually a broadly defined project is not do-able.

- Often the researcher finds that what he/she originally thought to be a good research project turns out to really be a group of research projects.
- Do one project for your dissertation and save the other projects for later in your career.
- Don't try to solve all of the problems in this one research project.

Include a title on your proposal.

- how often the title is left for the end of the student's writing and then somehow forgotten when the proposal is prepared for the committee.
- A good proposal has a good title and it is the first thing to help the reader begin to understand the nature of your work. Use it wisely!
- Work on your title early in the process and revisit it often. It's easy for a reader to identify those proposals where the title has been focused upon by the student.
- Preparing a good title means:
- ...having the most important words appear toward the beginning of your title,

What is Research

The word research is used in different field in different senses

If you are a beginner researcher, you are facing the same problem whether you are preparing a small project ,an MBA dissertation or a Ph.D theses. You need to select a topic, identify the objectives of your study plan and design a suitable methodology, devise research instrument, negotiate access to institutions material and people, collect, analysis and present information and finally, provides a well-written report or dissertation.

We all learn how to do research by actually doing it but a great deal of time

Can be wasted and goodwill dissipated by inadequate preparation. But before we discuss further it better to define the term research. Different people define it differently. For example;

A formal document

Knowing a subject thoroughly

Expression of ones undertaking About the topic

Result of ones intellectual curiosity

Analysis and syntheses of different resources

Reasonable bias free conclusion

Howard and Sharp(1983)

Seeking through methodical processes to add to one's own body of knowing and hopefully, to that of other , by discovery of non-trivial facts and insight.

Drew (1980)

Research is conducted to solve problems and expand knowledge. Research is a systematic way of asking questions, a systematic method of enquiry

We find the word research being used in two senses

1 the outcome of research is the establishment, publicizing or utilization of something that somebody-not the researcher or the person commissioning it- already knows.

2the outcome of knowledge that nobody had before.

The word research is used in different field in one or other of these senses and in some fields in both senses

Fiction

For many novelists It is essential to prepare for their writing by researching the background in which they wish to set their narrative for accuracy of description, sensitivity to atmosphere, history of the period in which their fiction takes place and authenticity of the language. The final criterion for them is the authenticity and artistic conviction of the final product in their reader's eyes. Research in this sense may take many forms, and involve considerable expense in terms of effort, time, and money: but the originality of the novel does not lie in the research but in the artistic creation for which it provides a background.

Journalism

For journalist, especially in investigative journalism, long periods of time are spent researching their stories to uncover facts and secrets which their editorial policy judges to be in the public interest, and in cross-checking what they are told or discover to establish its truth. This is not usually new truth, but information otherwise not public or deliberately withheld by another person. For them, the final criterion of truth may be bound up with legalities: the law of libel and slander, or the Official Secret Act.

Police work

For the police, there is an obvious parallel between preparing case against a suspect by detective work and research in this first sense: the criminal they seek has a secret which the police are bound to uncover. Here again the criterion of validity of the research is circumscribed by the law: laws of evidence, police procedure, protection of the rights of the innocent, the criminal and the victim. However, it is interesting that in this connection the language prefers the term 'detection' or 'investigation' to research.

In the commercial world, much money is invested in product development and even sponsorship of basic research, and here one is referring to the second sense as described above. However, research is also conducted into the people who will buy the products: market research. Market research is used to establish what can be sold who will buy it, how a product can be packaged, advertised

Business and commerce

In the commercial world, much money is invested in product development and even sponsorship of basic research, and here one is referring to the second sense as described above. However, research is also conducted into the people who will buy the products: market research. Market research is used to establish what can be sold who will buy it, how a product can be packaged, advertised priced to make it commercially attractive, and, linked to advertising campaigns, even to create market – to persuade people to buy something they did not know they wanted. The final criterion for research in this field is not therefore simply truth – the description of a market situation – and the authentic expression of that truth, but also the success of an intervention or manipulation of the market measured usually in profit terms.

Some obvious examples of research in the second sense are the following:

Medical research

This is research in the second sense: to find out things nobody knew before. The final criterion is the discovery of new truths, but also the translation of the new truths into practical treatments, and the developments of economies of scale so that the treatment is available for the largest number of people. Here ethical considerations receive a great deal of attention, both in terms of the human patients and the animals which are used for trials.

Science and technology

Everyone naturally associates research with science and technology, white coats and laboratories, but it should be remembered in this context that advances in the sciences are not restricted to the discovery of new facts: advances in theory development and in research methods and approaches occur in parallel. It is of course a commonplace, though nevertheless important, to highlight the ethics of the development of scientific knowledge, both in the process of gathering the knowledge and in the fields of application

Sections of a Thesis (Format)

The following are sections that most theses should contain

Introduction

This section is an introduction to the topic and the subject. It describes the background to the research, particularly the major ideas (or theoretical perspective) from which the research is derived. The introduction explains the reasons for doing the research, and indicates why the research is important valuable or significant. It outlines the contribution that the research will make to knowledge. The introduction also outlines the aims of the research by presenting research questions or hypotheses.

Be sure to include in the introduction a clear statement of your hypothesis and how you are going to address it Throughout the introduction you should use citations from the research literature to support your study. These citations should include but not be limited to research presented in the Literature • Review. The following are suggested topics that are usually covered in the introduction.

Statement of the Problem.

You should clearly state the problem that your thesis is going to address. You should also present relevant information about why this is an important problem. Describe what precisely you intend to show/argue and why (i.e., address the ever-lurking "So What?" question). Is your research problem addressing a significant social problem, or is it testing some theoretical hypothesis, such as the Marxist argument that high television viewing levels make people feel apolitical and powerless.

The issues raised ideally are timely, relevant to the problems or trends of the present time, and have broad applicability. Good questions are those allowing theories to be tested or, as when two theories make opposing predictions, be compared.

In this section you should first grab the attention and interest of your readers; and secondly introduce the problem to be studied. All assertions of fact must be documented. Be careful of any generalizations that you make. A social science research paper is not an editorial

Statement of the Problem.

Background and Need. You should present relevant literature that supports the need for your project. Research articles, books, educational and government statistics are just a few sources that should be used here. This section can include brief overviews of articles covered in the literature review that support the need for your project.

Rationale The rationale should define the larger problem being investigated, summarize what is known about the problem, define the gap(s) in the knowledge, and state what needs to be done to address the gap(s).

Purpose of the Project Based on the above background information, explain the purpose of the study. Explain what you hope the study will accomplish and why you chose to do this particular study. This should be supported with citations and specific information related to the study,

Research Questions/Hypotheses. Given the background above, you carefully state the hypothesis (ses) that will be tested in your thesis.

The hypothesis is the central question being researched. It should be expressed in straight-forward terms. A good hypothesis is comparative, measurable, and falsifiable.

Hypotheses are usually defined in "cause -effect" relationships. Any corollary hypotheses or secondary research questions should also be stated. Any supplemental definitions or discussion necessary to explain the hypothesis should be offered.

Underlying every theory is the issue of causality. What exactly does it mean to say that poverty "causes" crime, that cultural materialism "causes" moral decay, or that religiosity "causes" one's euthanasia attitudes? Just because two events historically occur simultaneously does not necessarily mean that one is influencing the other.

Limitations, Provide a background for any limitations to this study. Be very specific for example the population to which your findings will be limited.

Follow these guidelines while searching for a subject 4 topic

v Understand the distinction between the subject and a topic that can help you to plan your research paper effectively.

v Within a broader research subject decide about the topic that is more focused and worth an investigation.

v Consider your subject or topic and answer the questions who, what, when, where, why, and how.

v Draw a short and possible list of topics and settle for the one that interests you and is worth investigating.

v Explore your own understanding of the topic, as there's always a temptation to select a topic before a thorough ground work, resist the temptation.

Be sure that the topic meets the requirements of your research assignment, audience's needs, and expectations

- v Avoid dead end topics those unsuitable for your interest or resources.
- v Avoid scattered, superficial research topics.
- v Avoid topics that are too beaten and narrow and has nothing new to offer.
- v Pick a topic that shows your individuality, ability and interests.
- v Continue refining and narrowing it to make it significantly specific
- v ensure that there: are sufficient resources available on your selected topic because without a worthwhile literature

REVIEW THE THESIS WILL BE WORTHLESS.

- v v Ail research projects begin with the statement of hypothesis.
- v Hypothesis is a guide or a sign post to the researcher that keeps one on the track.
- v The researcher tests the initial presupposition or hypothesis as works along.
- v Hypothesis is formulated in such a way that it enables the researcher to test it.
- v Hypothesis depicts and describes the method that follows during the study.
- v Hypothesis is; a kind of hunch that the researcher has about the topic.
- v Hypothesis establishes the precise focus of the research study.
- v Hypothesis helps decide the aims and objectives of the study.
- v Hypothesis is of speculative nature, an imaginative preconception of "what might be true".
- v Hypothesis is a well established research question that can be in form of a descriptive statement or a question.
- v v The thesis statement is usually considered the most important sentence and the main point of your essay/ report or research paper because it out lines the central purpose of your essay.

A thesis, statement is one of the greatest unifying aspects of a paper. It should act as mortar, holding together the various bricks of a paper, summarizing the main point of the paper "in a nutshell" and heralds the development of the paper.

A thesis statement is what you'll PROVE, it is the ARGUMENT. If is the SCOPE, it is the MAIN IDEA and the PURPOSE of your paper and that you intend to develop, prove, defend or explore with evidence and therefore has an argumentative or informational edge and must not state the obvious.

A thesis statement is a sentence that clearly and concisely indicates the Subject of your paper, the main points you will discuss, and the order in which you will discuss them.

- v v A thesis statement establishes the writer's point of view, set the, stage or mood of the paper and prepare, the readers what to expect.

A thesis statement is important for the writer, because it gives the structure to the paper and is equally important for the readers, because it guides them as what to expect.

It is precise. It is not something that one has trouble understanding and should be specific enough to give your reader a clear sense of what your entire essay is going to discuss.

It should not be too general or so specific, that it fails to represent any strong position

Often, the thesis is stated clearly in one or two sentences at the end of, the essay's introduction. There are exceptions to almost every rule of writing, including this one. Ideally, the position of the thesis statement needs to be at the end of the introductory paragraph so that readers know the topic of the papers.

Literature Review

The literature review should discuss all of the research that has been done on the subject, since the purpose of the literature review is to concisely demonstrate your level of understanding of the research related to your project. You should not discuss all of the literature in-depth. Rather you should group your literature according to some general topics and only discuss specific studies if they are “landmark” studies for your area of research (there should be 6-10 of these). How you group the discussion will depend on your project but be sure to come up with a logical organization before you begin writing. How many studies should be included will depend on the topic, but a general baseline in 75 to 100 references (although many topics will appropriately have many more than this). The literature review should end with a discussion of how the literature relates to your study. What have others found regarding your research question? From their findings, coupled with your theory, develop a logical argument that leads to the statement of your hypothesis (this is your theoretical hypothesis expressed in terms of concepts). Your hypothesis/ hypotheses should be the conclusion of this “Review” section.

The method must reliable that can be repeated same time and internally and externally valid Describe the sample employed and the variable used to test your hypothesis. One should give just enough information here so that

Methodology

External validity means that the results are general sable to a wide range of situations. It if often necessary to present evidence in this section that they study is actually achievable. This section or a separate section should also describe the data analysis methods to be used. As with the data collection methods, the analysis methods should be justified by reference to the relevant literature. A methodology section can contain a flow chart which summarises the way in which the various processes involved in the project fit together.

Describe the sample employed and the variable used to test your hypothesis. One should give just enough information here so that others can replicate your procedures (and hopefully come up with the same findings and conclusion as you did).

A general guideline is that you should discuss your methods in sufficient detail that another researcher could take your data and duplicate your results. One of the expectations of performing original research is that someone in the future will do further research on this topic. Such a researcher should be able to use your methodology without having to consult any other source. If you are using statistical analyses, explain the statistical methods. What do they mean? How are they used? Why are they more applicable here than other similar methods?

Data collection and Analysis Plan

It is not uncommon for novice researchers to collect a considerable amount of data and then realize that they don't know what to do with it. Design the data collection process to make it easy to collect, code, manage, and analyze. Describe what the physical procedures will be for managing this data. Will you use tables, spreadsheets or data bases to aggregate and analyze the data? Will computers be used to store, manipulate or evaluate it? How will this to done? Who will do it? How long will it take? Will it require special hardware, software, budge accounts, or personnel (such as technical assistant)? What kinds of analysis will be done? How will it be accomplished? How will the findings be presented for interpretation?

Discussion

This chapter should begin with a concise restatement of your study's purpose along with any needed background information. You should restate each of your hypotheses. Now that you have presented the results in the previous section, discuss them in this section. What, specifically, do the results mean? How can they be interpreted? Can they be interpreted in multiple ways? What do the findings tell you about your hypothesis? Do not claim more for your results than the data really shows. Avoid speculation.

Conclusions

This should summarize your results and discussion. You should include a list of the most important findings of your study in descending order of important. You should also provide a statement about the possibility of future study. What needs to be done and what does this study contribute? Since this is too often the only part of a paper that some individuals read it is important to reiterate what you intended to discover and what, in fact, you fond.

Bibliography

All pieces of literature referred to should be listed at the end of the proposal using the referencing style appropriate to the department. Before you begin compiling this section, find out what style you are expected to use. Carefully adhere to it or you will raise the ire of your committee. It is important to ensure that all the key journals and books in the field have been referred to in the proposal. This demonstrates that the proposal has been developed from a thorough understanding of the important theoretical perspectives and research findings in the literature.

Appendices

If you have material that is too long to include in a table (raw data, field notes, etc.) or not appropriate to a particular section it should be included as an appendix.

Tables and Figures

Tables and figures should appear in the text after they are first mentioned. Appending them at the end of the thesis is a very awkward arrangement and makes the thesis difficult to read. Materials presented in tables and figures should not be duplicated in the text.

Raw Data

Your raw data should always appear as part of the thesis. This should appear as an appendix at the end of your thesis. Another research should be able to duplicate your work with no other documents at their disposal.

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

Making a Preliminary Choice of Methodology

Distinguish between three related concepts:

- i) Research Perspectives
- ii) Research Types
- iii) Research Methods

Research Perspectives

Quantitative and Qualitative Perspectives

A research perspective, as used here, is a general view and use of research approaches and methods. There are two major perspectives: quantitative and qualitative. The quantitative perspective derives from a positivist epistemology, which holds that there is an objective reality that can be expressed numerically. As a consequence the quantitative perspective emphasizes studies that are experimental in nature, emphasize measurement, and search for relationships. If a study uses language such as the following, it probably has used a quantitative perspective: variable, controls, validity, reliability, hypothesis, statically significant.

On the other hand, a qualitative perspective emphasizes a phenomenological view in which reality inheres in the perceptions of individuals. Studies deriving from this perspective focus on meaning and understanding, and take place in naturally occurring situations (McMillan, 1996). If a study uses language such as the following, it probably has used a qualitative perspective: naturalistic, field study, case study, context, situational, constructivism, meaning, multiple realities.

While some researchers seem chiefly concerned with the differences between the two approaches, Morgan (1997) explains how the two perspectives can be combined. He identifies four general ways of combining the two, based upon two factors: which one is primary and which, secondary; and which one is used first and which, second.

1. Quantitative primary, qualitative first. The researcher begins with a qualitative approach as the secondary method, using the qualitative data as a basis for collecting and interpreting the quantitative data (the primary method).
2. Quantitative primary, quantitative first. The researcher begins with a quantitative approach as the primary method, using qualitative follow-up to evaluate and interpret the quantitative results.
3. Qualitative primary, quantitative first. The researcher begins by collecting quantitative preliminary data as a basis for collecting and interpreting the primary qualitative data.
4. Qualitative primary, qualitative first. The researcher begins with the primary qualitative data, using quantitative follow up to interpret the qualitative data.

Research Types

The term research type is used here to identify the general research approach. While authorities in the field seem to differ as to how the types of research are classified, the following approaches, which are most often used in educational research, represent some of the options available to you as a researcher. To simplify the discussion, they are divided into whether they tend to use a quantitative or a qualitative perspective, although there is much overlapping in many of the types.

Studies Primarily Quantitative in Nature

The following types of research are primarily quantitative in nature.

Experimental Research

Experimental research uses methods originally applied in the physical and biological sciences. In most experiments the following procedures are used: a sample of subjects is selected; they are assigned randomly to experimental and control groups; a treatment is administered to the experimental group only.

The two groups are then evaluated on the basis of the dependent variable, the consequence of the independent variable. The latter is the presumed cause of the dependent variable.

Quasi-Experimental Research

A quasi-experimental design is one that follows the general procedures of experimental research, without the use of control group or without random assignment, since random assignment or the use of control groups is often not feasible in educational settings.

Causal-Comparative Research

Causal comparative studies are designed to determine the possible causes of a phenomenon. Sometimes these studies are called ex post facto research.

Correlational Research

Correlation studies are designed to analyze the relationships between two or more variables, ordinarily through the use of correlation coefficients.

Descriptive Research

As the term implies, the purpose of descriptive research is to describe a phenomenon. Descriptive studies report frequencies, averages, and percentages. For example, you might study the attitudes.

Evaluation Research

Evaluation research makes judgments about the merit or worth of educational programs, products, and organizations. It is typically undertaken in order to aid administrators in making professional decisions. Evaluation studies are usually described as either formative or summative. Formative studies are made while a new program or product is being developed; summative studies, when it has been completed. You might do an evaluation of a new standards-based curriculum, performing both a formative and a summative assessment.

Studies Primarily Qualitative in Nature

The following types of research tend to take a qualitative perspective.

Case Study Research

A case study is an empirical inquiry that investigates a contemporary phenomenon within its real life context; when the boundaries between phenomenon and context are not clearly evident; and in which multiple source of evidence are used. Qualitative perspective, concerned with exploring, describing, and explaining a phenomenon.

Ethnographic research

Ethnographic research is a special types of case study research. It is distinguished from other types of case studies because it uses the theories and methods of anthropology to study the culture of schools and classrooms.

Action Research

Most action research documents how an educational problem was identified, understood, and solved by practitioners.

Research Methods

Research methods, as the term is used here, are the specific techniques used to collect data with respect to the research problem. In general, five methods are typically used in educational research.

1. Test and measurements. Tests are administered and measurements made to determine the extent of change.
2. Interviews. Interviews are conducted with individuals or groups to ascertain their perceptions.
3. Observations. Observations are made to determine what is occurring and what individuals are doing.
4. Surveys. Surveys are administered to assess opinions, perceptions, and attitudes.
5. Documents. Documents are analyzed to establish the record.

How to Make Documents

- i) AMA
- ii) APA
- iii) Chicago

Your essay should be typed, double-spaced on standard-sized paper (8.5 X 11 inches) with margins of 1 inch on all sides. Your final essay should include, in the order indicated below, as many of the following sections as are applicable, each of which should begin on a separate page:

Title page: includes a running head for publication, title, and byline and affiliation.

General APA Guidelines

Page numbers and running head: in the upper right-hand corner of each page, include a 1-2 word version of your title. Follow with five spaces and then the page number.

Abstract: If your instructor requires an abstract, write a 75-100 word overview of your essay, which should include your main idea and your major points. You also may want to mention any implications of your research. Place the abstract on its own page immediately after the title page. Center the word Abstract and then follow with the paragraph.

Headings: Although not absolutely necessary, headings can be helpful. For undergraduate papers, only one level of heading is necessary. Major headings should be centered. Capitalize every word in the heading except articles (a, the), short prepositions (in, by, for), and coordinating conjunctions (and, but, or).

Visuals: Visuals such as tables and figures include graphs, charts, drawings, and photographs. Try to keep the visuals as simple as possible and clearly label each visual with an Arabic numeral (ex: Table 1, Table 2, etc.) and include the title of the visual. The label and the title should appear on separate lines above the table, flush left. Below the table, provide the source. A sample Figure treatment is shown below.

List of References:

Create your list of references on its own page after the last page of your text. Center the title References one inch from the top of the page. Double space. Alphabetize the list of references by the last name of the authors. If the work has no author or editor, alphabetize the work by the first word of the title (excluding A, An, or The).

In-Text Citations: The Basics

Reference citations in text are covered on pages 207-214 of the Publication Manual. What follows are some general guidelines for referring to the works of others in your essay.

Note: APA style requires authors to use the past tense or present perfect tense when using signal phrases to describe earlier research. E.g., Jones (1998) found or Jones (1998) has found...

APA Citation Basics

When using APA format, follow the author-date method of in-text citation. This means that the author's last name and the year of publication for the source should appear in the text, E.g., (Jones, 1998), and a complete reference should appear in the reference list at the end of the paper.

If you are referring to an idea from another work but NOT directly quoting the material, or making reference to an entire book, article or other work, you only have to make reference to the author and year of publication in your in-text reference.

In-Text Citation Capitalization, Quotes, and Italics/Underlining

Always capitalize proper nouns, including author names and initials: D. Jones.

If you refer to the title of a source within your paper, capitalize all words that are four letters long or greater within the title of a source: Permanence and Change. Exceptions apply to short words that are verbs, nouns, pronouns, adjectives, and adverbs: Writing New Media, There Is Nothing Left to Lose. (Note that in your References list, only the first word of a title will be capitalized: Writing new media.)

When capitalizing titles, capitalize both words in a hyphenated compound word: Natural-Born Cyborgs.

Capitalize the first word after a dash or colon: "Defining Film Rhetoric: The Case of Hitchcock's Vertigo."

Italicize or underline the titles of longer works such as books, edited collections, movies, television series, documentaries, or albums: The Closing of the American Mind; The Wizard of Oz; Friends.

Put quotation marks around the titles of shorter works such as journal articles, articles from edited collections, television series episodes, and song titles: "Multimedia Narration: Constructing Possible Worlds"; "The One Where Chandler Can't Cry."

Short Quotations

If you are directly quoting from a work, you will need to include the author, year of publication, and the page number for the reference (preceded by "p."). Introduce the quotation with a signal phrase that includes the author's last name followed by the date of publication in parentheses.

According to Jones (1998), "Students often had difficulty using APA style, especially when it was their first time" (p. 199).

Jones (1998) found "students often had difficulty using APA style" (p. 199); what implications does this have for teachers?

If the author is not named in a signal phrase, place the author's last name, the year of publication, and the page number in parentheses after the quotation.

She stated, "Students often had difficulty using APA style," (Jones, 1998, p. 199), but she did not offer an explanation as to why.

Long Quotations

Place direct quotations longer than 40 words in a free-standing block of typewritten lines, and omit quotation marks. Start the quotation on a new line, indented five spaces from the left margin. Type the entire quotation on the new margin, and indent the first line of any subsequent paragraph within the quotation five spaces from the new margin. Maintain double-spacing throughout. The parenthetical citation should come after closing punctuation mark.

Jones's (1998) study found the following:

Students often had difficulty using APA style, especially when it was their first time citing sources. This difficulty could be attributed to the fact that many students failed to purchase a style manual or to ask their teacher for help. (p. 199)

Summary or Paraphrase

If you are paraphrasing an idea from another work, you only have to make reference to the author and year of publication in your in-text reference, but APA guidelines encourage you to also provide the page number (although it is not required.)

According to Jones (1998), APA style is a difficult citation format for first-time learners.

APA style is a difficult citation format for first-time learners (Jones, 1998, p. 199).

In-Text Citations: Author/Authors

APA style has a series of important rules on using author names as part of the author-date system. There are additional rules for citing indirect sources, electronic sources, and sources without page numbers.

Citing an Author or Authors

A Work by Two Authors: Name both authors in the signal phrase or in the parentheses each time you cite the work. Use the word "and" between the authors' names within the text and use "&" in the parentheses.

Research by Wegener and Petty (1994) showed...
(Wegener & Petty, 1994)

A Work by Three to Five Authors: List all the authors in the signal phrase or in parentheses the first time you cite the source.

(Kernis, Cornell, Sun, Berry, & Harlow, 1993)

In subsequent citations, only use the first author's last name followed by "et al." in the signal phrase or in parentheses.

(Kernis et al., 1993)

In et al., et should not be followed by a period.

Six or More Authors: Use the first author's name followed by et al. in the signal phrase or in parentheses.

Harris et al. (2001) argued...

(Harris et al., 2001)

Unknown Author: If the work does not have an author, cite the source by its title in the signal phrase or use the first word or two in the parentheses. Titles of books and reports are italicized or underlined; titles of articles and chapters are in quotation marks.

A similar study was done of students learning to format research papers ("Using APA," 2001).

Note: In the rare case the "Anonymous" is used for the author, treat it as the author's name (Anonymous, 2001). In the reference list, use the name Anonymous as the author.

Organization as an Author: If the author is an organization or a government agency, mention the organization in the signal phrase or in the parenthetical citation the first time you cite the source.

According to the American Psychological Association (2000),...

If the organization has a well-known abbreviation, include the abbreviation in brackets the first time the source is cited and then use only the abbreviation in later citations.

First citation: (Mothers Against Drunk Driving [MADD], 2000)

Second citation: (MADD, 2000)

Two or More Works in the Same Parentheses: When your parenthetical citation includes two or more works, order them the same way they appear in the reference list, separated by a semi-colon.

(Berndt, 2002; Harlow, 1983)

Authors With the Same Last Name: To prevent confusion, use first initials with the last names.

(E. Johnson, 2001; L. Johnson, 1998)

Two or More Works by the Same Author in the Same Year: If you have two sources by the same author in the same year, use lower-case letters (a, b, c) with the year to order the entries in the reference list. Use the lower-case letters with the year in the in-text citation.

Research by Berndt (1981a) illustrated that...

Personal Communication: For interviews, letters, e-mails, and other person-to-person communication, cite the communicators name, the fact that it was personal communication, and the date of the communication. Do not include personal communication in the reference list.

(E. Robbins, personal communication, January 4, 2001).

A. P. Smith also claimed that many of her students had difficulties with APA style (personal communication, November 3, 2002).

Citing Indirect Sources

If you use a source that was cited in another source, name the original source in your signal phrase. List the secondary source in your reference list and include the secondary source in the parentheses.

Johnson argued that...(as cited in Smith, 2003, p.102).

Note: When citing material in parentheses, set off the citation with a comma, as above.

Electronic Sources

If possible, cite an electronic document the same as any other document by using the author-date style.

Kenneth (2000) explained...

Unknown Author and Unknown Date: If no author or date is given, use the title in your signal phrase or the first word or two of the title in the parentheses and use the abbreviation "n.d." (for "no date").

Another study of students and research decisions discovered that students succeeded with tutoring ("Tutoring and APA," n.d.).

Sources Without Page Numbers

When an electronic source lacks page numbers, you should try to include information that will help readers find the passage being cited. When an electronic document has numbered paragraphs, use the ¶ symbol, or the abbreviation "para." followed by the paragraph number (Hall, 2001, ¶ 5) or (Hall, 2001, para. 5). If the paragraphs are not numbered and the document includes headings, provide the appropriate heading and specify the paragraph under that heading. Note that in some electronic sources, like Web pages, people can use the Find function in their browser to locate any passages you cite.

According to Smith (1997), ... (Mind over Matter section, para. 6).

Note: Never use the page numbers of Web pages you print out; different computers print Web pages with different pagination.

RESEARCH METHODOLOGYReference List: Basic Rules

Your reference list should appear at the end of your paper. It provides the information necessary for a reader to locate and retrieve any source you cite in the body of the paper. Each source you cite in the paper must appear in your reference list; likewise, each entry in the reference list must be cited in your text.

Your references should begin on a new page separate from the text of the essay; label this page References (with no quotation marks, underlining, etc.), centered at the top of the page. It should be double-spaced just like the rest of your essay.

Basic Rules

- All lines after the first line of each entry in your reference list should be indented one-half inch from the left margin. This is called hanging indentation.
- Authors' names are inverted (last name first); give the last name and initials for all authors of a particular work unless the work has more than six authors. If the work has more than six authors, list the first six authors and then use et al. after the sixth author's name to indicate the rest of the authors.
- Reference list entries should be alphabetized by the last name of the first author of each work.
- If you have more than one article by the same author, single-author references or multiple-author references with the exact same authors in the exact same order are listed in order by the year of publication, starting with the earliest.
- When referring to any work that is NOT a journal, such as a book, article, or Web page, capitalize only the first letter of the first word of a title and subtitle, the first word after a colon or a dash in the title, and proper nouns. Do not capitalize the first letter of the second word in a hyphenated compound word.
- Capitalize all major words in journal titles.
- Italicize titles of longer works such as books and journals.
- Do not italicize, underline, or put quotes around the titles of shorter works such as journal articles or essays in edited collections.

Reference List: Author/Authors

The following rules for handling works by a single author or multiple authors apply to all APA-style references in your reference list, regardless of the type of work (book, article, electronic resource, etc.)

Single Author

Last name first, followed by author initials.

Berndt, T. J. (2002). Friendship quality and social development. Current Directions in Psychological Science, 11, 7-10.

Two Authors

List by their last names and initials. Use the "&" instead of "and."

Wegener, D. T., & Petty, R. E. (1994). Mood management across affective states: The hedonic contingency hypothesis. Journal of Personality & Social Psychology, 66, 1034-1048.

List by last names and initials; commas separate author names, while the last author name is preceded again by "&"

Kernis, M. H., Cornell, D. P., Sun, C. R., Berry, A., & Harlow, T. (1993). There's more to self-esteem than whether it is high or low: The importance of stability of self-esteem. Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 65, 1190-1204.

More Than Six Authors

If there are more than six authors, list the first six as above and then "et al.," which stands for "and others." Remember not to place a period after "et" in "et al."

Harris, M., Karper, E., Stacks, G., Hoffman, D., DeNiro, R., Cruz, P., et al. (2001). Writing labs and the Hollywood connection. Journal of Film and Writing, 44(3), 213-245.

Organization as Author

American Psychological Association. (2003).

Unknown Author

Merriam-Webster's collegiate dictionary (10th ed.).(1993). Springfield, MA: Merriam-Webster.

NOTE: When your essay includes parenthetical citations of sources with no author named, use a shortened version of the source's title instead of an author's name. Use quotation marks and italics as appropriate. For example, parenthetical citations of the two sources above would appear as follows: (Merriam-Webster's, 1993) and ("New Drug," 1993).

Two or More Works by the Same Author

Use the author's name for all entries and list the entries by the year (earliest comes first).

Berndt, T.J. (1981).

Berndt, T.J. (1999).

When an author appears both as a sole author and, in another citation, as the first author of a group, list the one-author entries first.

Berndt, T. J. (1999). Friends' influence on students' adjustment to school. Educational Psychologist, 34, 15-28.

Berndt, T. J., & Keefe, K. (1995). Friends' influence on adolescents' adjustment to school. Child Development, 66, 1312-1329.

References that have the same first author and different second and/or third authors are arranged alphabetically by the last name of the second author, or the last name of the third if the first and second authors are the same.

Wegener, D. T., Kerr, N. L., Fleming, M. A., & Petty, R. E. (2000). Flexible corrections of juror judgments: Implications for jury instructions. Psychology, Public Policy, & Law, 6, 629-654.

Wegener, D. T., Petty, R. E., & Klein, D. J. (1994). Effects of mood on high elaboration attitude change: The mediating role of likelihood judgments. European Journal of Social Psychology, 24, 25-43.

If you are using more than one reference by the same author (or the same group of authors listed in the same order) published in the same year, organize them in the reference list alphabetically by the title of the article or chapter. Then assign letter suffixes to the year. Refer to these sources in your essay as they appear in your reference list, e.g.: "Berndt (1981a) makes similar claims..."

Berndt, T. J. (1981a). Age changes and changes over time in prosocial intentions and behavior between friends. Developmental Psychology, 17, 408-416.

Berndt, T. J. (1981b). Effects of friendship on prosocial intentions and behavior. Child Development, 52, 636-643.

Reference List: Articles in Periodicals

Basic Form

APA style dictates that authors are named last name followed by initials; publication year goes between parentheses, followed by a period. The title of the article is in sentence-case, meaning only the first word and proper nouns in the title are capitalized. The periodical title is run in title case, and is followed by the volume number which, with the title, is also italicized or underlined.

Author, A. A., Author, B. B., & Author, C. C. (Year). Title of article. Title of Periodical, volume number(issue number), pages.

Article in Journal Paginated by Volume

Journals that are paginated by volume begin with page one in issue one, and continue numbering issue two where issue one ended, etc.

Harlow, H. F. (1983). Fundamentals for preparing psychology journal articles. Journal of Comparative and Physiological Psychology, 55, 893-896.

Article in Journal Paginated by Issue

Journals paginated by issue begin with page one every issue; therefore, the issue number gets indicated in parentheses after the volume. The parentheses and issue number are not italicized or underlined.

Scruton, R. (1996). The eclipse of listening. The New Criterion, 15(30), 5-13.

Article in a Magazine

Henry, W. A., III. (1990, April 9). Making the grade in today's schools. Time, 135, 28-31.

Article in a Newspaper

Unlike other periodicals, p. or pp. precedes page numbers for a newspaper reference in APA style. Single pages take p., e.g., p. B2; multiple pages take pp., e.g., pp. B2, B4 or pp. C1, C3-C4.

Schultz, S. (2005, December 28). Calls made to strengthen state energy policies. The Country Today, pp. 1A, 2A.

Basic Format for Books

Author, A. A. (Year of publication). Title of work: Capital letter also for subtitle. Location: Publisher.

Article From a Database

When referencing material obtained from an online database (such as a database in the library), provide appropriate print citation information (formatted just like a "normal" print citation would be for that type of work). Then add information that gives the date of retrieval and the proper name of the database. This will allow people to retrieve the print version if they do not have access to the database from which you retrieved the article. You can also include the item number or accession number in parentheses at the end, but the APA manual says that this is not required. (For more about citing articles retrieved from electronic databases, see page 278 of the Publication Manual.)

Nonperiodical Web Document, Web Page, or Report

If there is a page like <http://www.somesite.com/somepage.htm>, and somepage.htm doesn't have the information you're looking for, move up the URL to <http://www.somesite.com/>):

NOTE: When an Internet document is more than one Web page, provide a URL that links to the home page or entry page for the document. Also, if there isn't a date available for the document use (n.d.) for no date.
